RUSSIANS DISAPPOINTED

Czar's Edict Not Regarded As "Marking a New Epoch."

PRESS COMMENT IS DECEPTIVE

Russian Papers' Remarks Must Be Read Between the Lines—The Manifesto Thought to be "An Opportunity Missed."

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES SPECIAL CABLEGRAMS.

LONDON, March 16.—The Czar's proclamation, says the St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times, continues to form the subject of almost universal discussion. Unless foreign semi-official telegrams are more than usually misleading, observers and critics seem to have jumped to the conclusion that the manifesto marks "a new epoch in the history of Russia," and that the reforms announced are such as to satisfy all reasonable aspirations of educated Russians.

The correspondent says that the comments of the Russian press itself lend some color to this view, but on such an occasion nothing is more deceptive than Russian newspaper criticism to those who have not learned to read between the lines. It is so often forgotten abroad that every Russian journalist, especially when treating of internal matters, is obliged to write with one eye on the Press Censorship Department of the Ministry of the Interior.

The more servile, remarks the correspondent, write what they think will please the authorities; the more independent strive to steer a course between the Scylla of the Censorship and the Charybdis of their own consciences, and, as far as possible, to express their opinions without exposing themselves to punishment and their newspapers to confiscation.

A favorite artifice is for writers to give to official acts and utterances an interpretation, or rather a misinterpretation, not corresponding to the actual facts, but to what the writers think ought to be the facts. In this way, says the correspondent, it is often possible to condemn severely while seeming to praise.

Thus the correspondent goes on to say, when a Liberal paper describes the Czar's proclamation as "opening a new era of reforms," it is more than likely that it merely means that the moment has come when the Government should resume the task begun by Alexander II. and initiate a series of sweeping reforms. When another paper speaks of the reorganization of provincial and local administration announced by the Czar as foreshadowing a wide extension of local representative self-government," it does little more than express the conviction that such is the object which the reorganization should have in view.

The correspondent says that columns could be quoted from Russian papers which give the impression that the manifesto has been received by public opinion with feelings of profound joy and gratitude and that it marks a step in advance only comparable to the liberation of the serfs. Nothing, he asserts, could be more misleading.

It is true, declares the correspondent, that the announcement of the forthcoming abolition of collective peasant responsibility and the fetters placed by the commune system on individual freedom has given great and universal satisfaction. The rest of the programme, however, has been read with a feeling of deep and often bitter disappointment.

No one seems to anticipate for a moment that it will do anything to quiet or restrain the agitation now in progress.

The general verdict is that the manifesto is "an opportunity missed."

In a later dispatch the correspondent says that the Moscow Viedomosti, formerly Katkoff's organ, contains what is probably the most sincere appreciation of the manifesto that has yet appeared. It speaks of the "disquieting rumors" which have long agitated Russia by the talk of new and unknown paths on which the country is about to venture, adding: "These rumors, industriously circulated by Russia's enemies at home and abroad, created disorders, fermentation, wrangling, and discontent in all classes of society."

The paper says it had become highly necessary that a decisive word should be uttered which would free Russia from uncertainty and mark out the path she should follow. "This word is now uttered," declares the Viedomosti.

The Viedomosti then proceeds to show by quotations from the manifesto that the Czar is resolved to maintain intact the principles of absolute monarchy and of the Orthodox Church, and that, moreover, a quietus has been given to the illusion that local elements are to be rendered less dependent on the central Government. The paper adds:

"The manifesto revives in all its strength the fundamental principle that an administration is strictly responsible to the Emperor for the prosperity of a district intrusted to its care, but that responsibility can only be imposed when no other authority is allowed to paralyze its activity within its own sphere."

CARDINAL GIBBONS'S COMMENT.

He Hopes the Church Authorities Will Not Modify the Effect of the Czar's Edict.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, March 15.—Cardinal Gibbons to-day, commenting on the Czar's manifesto, said:

"In my judgment it may be considered the most unexpected as well as the most important and beneficent movement that has occurred in the twentieth century.

"I have some misapprehensions, however—I trust that they are groundless—that the ecclesiastical authorities, who are very powerful in Russia, may in some respects modify the beneficent features of the decree. I hope that the Jews will have a share in the proposed radical changes."

FATAL DUEL OF FARMERS.

Texans Shoot at Each Other from Boats —One, Wounded, Falls into a River and Drowns.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, March 15.—Two of the best-known farmers of Dallas County fought a duel from boats yesterday afternoon. One of them met death and the other surrendered to officers and is a prisoner in the County Jail.

The duelists were J. T. Coker and William Leopard. The men had ill-feeling of long standing toward each other. They met in the village of Hutchins yesterday morning and assaulted each other. Friends separated them and they left the village, each warning the other to "be ready" when they should meet again.

Late yesterday afternoon the two men were seen to enter small rowboats, each carrying a shotgun. The men pulled their boats toward a broad stretch of backwater. When within about fifty yards of each other Coker and Leopard opened fire almost simultaneously.

At the second round fired Leopard was seen to stagger in his boat and fall into the water. Coker pulled for the shore. A posse of citizens at once searched the waters and recovered Leopard's body.

Coker surrendered last night to Constable Lowry and was to-day placed in the Dallas County Jail in this city. He refuses to discuss the tragedy. All that he has been heard to say since surrendering was:

"I shot for his head and got him; but he fired first."

VANDALISM AT PRINCETON.

Bronze Lion on Nassau Hall Steps Beheaded by Graduates and Upper Classmen—Gymnasium Staircase Injured.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., March 15.—One of the big bronze lions which guard the entrance to historic Nassau Hall was so badly disfigured last night as to render impossible any satisfactory repair. A group of young graduates and a contingent of upper classmen met together on the steps at a late hour to sing their class songs and to have an informal celebration, as has been the time-honored custom upon the return of alumni. A too-enthusiastic celebration along this line by the singers last night accounts for the destruction of the bronze lion, a symbol of the house of Nassau, from which Nassau Hall derived its name.

In the jollification that took place during the singing some unnecessary roughness was in order, and the harmless inanimate king was beheaded and otherwise badly mutilated. The college protector this morning gathered up the fragments and reported the accident to President Wilson, who expressed deep regret over the affair. The undergraduates were greatly indignant to-day, and charge the parties responsible for the accident with being too careless in their actions during their celebrations.

Still greater significance is attached to the demolition of the lion, since it was the class of '79 of which President Wilson is a member, that presented the lions to the university. While no official action has yet been taken, orders will doubtless be given to-morrow for the erection of a new lion.

Coincident with the mutilation of the lion on the steps of Nassau Hall a piece of vandalism was committed on the new gymnasium last night, about $200 damage being done to a winding staircase. The perpetrators have not been detected.

SAMUEL SPENCER TO RESIGN?

Report That He Will Relinquish the Southern Railway's Presidency April 15.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., March 15.—The Journal and Tribune says: "Samuel Spencer is to relinquish the Presidency of the Southern Railway on April 15. He will be succeeded by W. W. Finley, at present Second Vice President of the road. Col. W. A. Henderson, Assistant General Counsel of the Southern, stated in an interview last night that preparations were being made for the change, which will occur soon after the return from Europe of Mr. Finley, who has been absent for some time in search of health.

"While Col. Henderson refused to state positively what Mr. Spencer will do after resigning, he did not deny that he was to be made Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Morgan group of railroads."

GATES TO ANSWER MORGAN.

Says He Is Ready to Tell Things About That Financier at the Inter-State Commerce Commission's Hearing.

Special to The New York Times.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., March 15.—John W. Gates, who helped to stir up the market in Louisville and Nashville and other securities last Summer, wired to Louisville to-day that he will be ready on March 27 to answer the charge made by J. Pierpont Morgan that he was a dangerous man to control the Louisville and Nashville or any other property. Mr. Gates indicated that he was anxious to say some things about Mr. Morgan in exchange for what Mr. Morgan had said about him.

It is expected the whole truth of the "inside" of the Louisville and Nashville deal will come to light at the Inter-State Commerce Commission's hearing, which will be held in New York. Col. Bennett H. Young, C. C. McCord, and Clifton J. Pratt, Attorney General, will attend the hearing. Mr. Pratt will represent the State and Col. Young will act as his assistant. Mr. McCord is a member of the State Railroad Commission. Traffic Managers Compton of the Louisville and Nashville and Culp of the Southern have been summoned to appear.

KILLED BY MASKED ROBBERS.

Fatal Shooting Occurs in a Restaurant at Pueblo, Col.

PUEBLO, Col., March 15.—Masked robbers entered a prominent restaurant here this evening and shot two citizens.

One of them, Dr. Turner, was instantly killed.

DR. W. S. WEBB ILL.

Unexpectedly Arrives at San Francisco, Where He Is Confined to His Apartments With Gout.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 15.—Dr. William Seward Webb of New York, who with a party of friends reached Southern California from the East several days ago, has arrived unexpectedly at San Francisco, and is now in seclusion in his apartments at the Palace Hotel. Dr. Webb is suffering from an attack of the gout.

Accompanying Dr. Webb was Dr. Bigham, his own physician. Arriving here, Dr. Webb's car was hurriedly switched to a side track and a cab secured to carry the travelers to a hotel. Dr. Webb was removed from the car to the cab in an invalid's chair, but when he reached the Palace Hotel he was able to get out of the conveyance with the assistance of his physician and an attendant.

STRIKE EXPECTED ON THE NEW HAVEN ROAD

Indications That the Employes Mean to Quit Their Posts.

Result of Their Ballotings Probably Will Be Known To-day—The Real Question Between Them and the Railroad.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, March 15.—Employes of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad confidently expect to know before to-morrow noon whether a strike has been ordered or the men have voted down the proposition which was submitted to them several days ago by the Grievance Committees. The expectation of the employes in and near this city seems to be that a strike has been ordered.

Out of a mass of rumors and reports that have been heard only a few authenticated facts are known with regard to the poll. Not half the members of the Grievance Committee have arrived or sent word to Valentine Fitzpatrick, the brotherhood officer of the trainmen, in this city. Mr. Fitzpatrick, however, admitted to-night that such reports as he had received indicated there would be a strike. He made the following statement for publication:

"As to the probable result of the ballot I don't care to say. From present indications it seems as if the inevitable confronts us. However, Mr. Wilkins, Second Senior Grand Conductor of the Brotherhood of Railway Conductors, and myself will go to every honorable end consistent with the rights of the employes to prevent trouble. As to the rumored position of the Board of Directors of the road in this matter I have no criticism to offer. I hoped for something different."

The Grievance Committeemen are expected to arrive in the city early to-morrow morning. Their meeting is called for 9 A. M., but several will not get into the city until later, coming from distant points. They will bring sealed returns from the local brotherhood branches.

The remarkable feature of the present trouble on the New Haven Road is that the question of a readjustment of the pay and time schedule of the freight and passenger conductors, flagmen, baggagemasters, and brakemen has not yet come to be the point at issue.

The question up to this time has simply been whether the New Haven Road officials are to be forced to depart from the custom of the road and receive a joint committee representing the trades unions of the conductors and trainmen. Up to this time efforts to bring the road to this have failed.

The last schedule of the conductors was accepted by them last January, after a series of amicable conferences, a trades union committee from the conductors being received by the officials of the road. On March 4, 1902, the freight conductors, flagmen, and brakemen secured a new schedule, after exactly the same reception of their committee by the railroad.

Both conductors and trainmen are now embarked on what railroad men say will prove a fruitless attempt to bring about a radical change in the traditional method of the road in dealing with its employes. At any time the road is willing to meet individual committees representing unions or not, but will not discuss conductors' wages with trainmen and vice versa. It is on this question that the strength of the two parties to the dispute is now likely to be tried.

Neither side will recede from its position, according to statements made to-day, and by Thursday or Friday a tie-up of the system is likely to come.

WATERBURY FIGHT GOES ON.

President of American Association of Street Railway Employes Takes Charge of the Strike.

WATERBURY, Conn., March 15.—That the striking employes of the Connecticut Railway and Lighting Company will fight to the last ditch became evident to-night upon the arrival here of W. D. Mahon, President of the American Association of Street Railway Employes, accompanied by Treasurer Orr of the same association. President Mahon immediately went into consultation with the Executive Committee of the strikers and the members of the National Board, who are already here.

At the close of the conference Mr. Mahon issued a statement announcing that it was the intention of the strikers, with the assistance of the National body, to fight the trolley company to a finish.

In his statement President Mahon characterises the injunction issued by Judge Elmer yesterday as the most absurd and un-American edict issued by an American court.

"We shall fight this injunction," he says, "in a legal and lawful manner."

After stating that if it can be proved that the strikers have participated in any lawlessness they will not be supported by the National body, Mr. Mahon closes his statement by saying: "We will make every effort in our power, either through arbitration or otherwise, to bring about a satisfactory settlement."

No disturbance of any kind was reported to-night.

WOMAN NETTLES DR. HALE.

The Divine Declines to Answer a Question Brought Out by His Advocacy of Municipal Ownership.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, March 15.—The Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale addressed the members and guests of the Highland Union, Roxbury, on "Municipal Ownership" this noon. He expressed the opinion that the use of gas and telephone and telegraph would in time come under municipal control.

At the close of his remarks, Dr. Hale permitted the audience to question him. In reply to the question asked by a member, whether municipal ownership would not tend to destroy healthy competition, Dr. Hale said he thought it would not. Thereupon Miss W. B. Knowles, the only woman present, startled the audience by asking Dr. Hale:

"Do you think there ever has been, or ever could be, under existing conditions, any such thing as a healthy competition?"

The doctor paused a moment, visibly nettled by the question, and finally dismissed it as a departure from the subject. Miss Knowles expressed herself of the opinion that her question was as pertinent as any asked.

SETTLING COLORADO STRIKE.

Partial Agreement with Mill Men Reached—Troops to be Withdrawn.

DENVER, March 15.—A partial settlement has been effected in the mill men's strike at Colorado City, which has been on for nearly a month, and on account of which the State troops were ordered out.

One of the features of the settlement is an agreement that the troops shall be withdrawn at once.

Only two of the three mills that have been affected have accepted the terms of settlement, namely, the Portland and Telluride Mills. The employes of the Standard Mill refused to make and concessions whatever, and the strike will be continued there.

COMING POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT CHANGE.

Reported Assistant Attorney General Tyner Will Be Asked to Resign—No Bearing on Turf Scandal.

WASHINGTON, March 15.—The Post to-morrow will say:

It is announced that Mr. James N. Tyner, Assistant Attorney General for the Post Office Department, will be requested in the near future to tender his resignation, but the announcement is accompanied with the statement that this action will have no bearing on the complaint filed with the President by T. C. Campbell of Cincinnati, an attorney representing several of the turf concerns whose affairs recently have been aired in the courts. Mr. Tyner is incapacitated by illness from performing the duties of his office, and it is said his resignation will be requested solely on that account. Mr. Tyner is seventy-seven years of age, and suffered a stroke of paralysis last July, and in December had a relapse.

Mr. Tyner denounces as absurd and ridiculous the charges that there was wrongdoing in connection with decisions by his office respecting the right of "turf investment companies" to use the mails. The matter, he said, was taken up on the report of an Inspector and disposed of as hundreds of other cases are. No evidence was submitted with the Inspector's report showing that the concerns were either lotteries or frauds, and under the law the Department had no right to interfere.

The Post also will say that Mr. Tyner admitted yesterday that Harrison J. Barrett, his nephew by marriage and formerly his assistant in the Law Division in the Post Office Department, had represented as an attorney one of the turf investment concerns in the matter of the mail privileges, but said it was after Barrett had severed his connection with the department. He also said Barrett had rendered legal services to a number of the "bond investment companies," as to the legality of which the latter had written an official opinion while still in the Post Office Department. This service also was rendered after Barrett had left the department.

The opinion prepared by Barrett declared that the bond concerns as organized were in violation of law and not entitled to mail privileges, but to the opinion was attached an appendix stating that by certain changes in their by-laws and in the wording of their literature they could be admitted to the mails. This appendix, Mr. Tyner said, was not written by Barrett, but by Postmaster General Smith. The department had official knowledge of more than 600 of these concerns, and the capital involved was estimated at $50,000,000. It was the opinion of Mr. Smith and other officials of the department that the business should not be crushed out if it could be made legal, and such an eminent lawyer as John G. Carlisle had appeared before the department in behalf of the concerns.

PITTSBURG RECORDER DEAD.

Sudden Death of J. O. Brown, Who Was to Give Up His Office To-day, Shocks the Community.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, March 15.—Nothing has given this community such a shock in recent years as the announcement to-day of the sudden death of Joseph Owen Brown, Recorder of the City of Pittsburg. Although it was known that he was ill, it was not thought that his condition was serious. To-morrow he was to give up the office of Chief Justice of the city, and arrangements had been made to hold imposing ceremonies. Instead, the body of the Recorder will be taken to the Court House in the afternoon, where it will lie in state until arrangements have been completed for the funeral.

All kinds of rumors were at first in circulation as to the cause of death. It was even reported that Mr. Brown committed suicide. The truth appears to be that he died from nervous collapse, superinduced, it is believed, by the unusually perturbed condition of politics in the county. The Recorder had a great deal of personal trouble in recent years, not the least of which was the failure of his political aspirations. A week ago he sent his resignation as Recorder to Gov. Pennypacker, to go into effect to-morrow. Immediately afterward he went to his home, where he had since been confined.

John S. Lambie, President of the Select Council, will be sworn in as Recorder to-morrow until Mr. Brown's successor is named.

Mr. Brown was born near Tarentum, this county, in January, 1846, and had always since early manhood been prominent in county and city politics. He is survived by a widow and several children.

Mr. Brown served continuously as the head of the Department of Public Safety from November, 1897, until August, 1901, when he was removed by Recorder A. M. Brown. In November, 1901, he was appointed Recorder by Gov. Stone to succeed A. M. Brown.

TWO MEN STRANGELY SHOT.

One Man Dead, Another Near Death at Pittston, Penn. — Stray Bullets, Perhaps, Hit Them.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., March 15.—Anthony McHugh, a freight conductor on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, and James Kearney, were found on the main street of Pittston early to-day bleeding from pistol wounds. Both men were on their way to work when they were shot.

McHugh died shortly after being discovered. Kearney was taken to the City Hospital here. It was found that he was shot near the heart, and his recovery is doubtful. The shooting is a mystery. The supposition is that the men received their wounds from pistol shots fired by a party of drunken men who were fighting near a saloon, as McHugh and Kearney approached.

McHugh was forty years of age, and leaves a wife and two children. Kearney is twenty-seven years of age and single.

WOMAN'S MANIA TO POISON.

Confesses Killing Her Husband and Is Adjudged Insane—May Have Poisoned Others.

Special to The New York Times.

WANAKONETA, Ohio, March 15.—Daniel Finity, a wealthy retired farmer near here, died last Tuesday in suspicious circumstances. The Coroner yesterday reported that Finity's death was due to poison administered by his wife. Mrs. Finity confessed that she had purchased morphine powders and given them to her husband. Acting on the report of the Coroner's Jury, Mrs. Finity was adjudged insane and will be sent to the Toledo Asylum.

The certificate of the examining physician shows that the woman had an unconquerable desire to purchase poison and give it to those with whom she came in contact. It is recalled that the father, mother, and sister of her husband died under mysterious circumstances several years ago, the symptoms resembling those of arsenical poisoning. Rumors were circulated at the time, but no investigation was instituted. From admissions made by the woman at the inquest upon the death of her husband, it is inferred that she also poisoned her relatives.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY WRECK.

CHARLESTON, S. C., March 15.—The Southern Railway Vestibule Train No. 24, due at Camden at 11:30 A. M., was wrecked at a switch eight miles north of that point to-day. The front trucks under the baggage car jumped the main track, and threw the train into the side track, all cars being completely derailed, except the Pullman, which had one set of wheels off.

One man, an unknown tramp, supposedly asleep on the siding, was killed instantly, and Jim Reed, colored, a passenger, had one leg broken. Lewis Clyburn and Mrs. M. E. Taylor escaped with slight injuries.

THE SOUTH'S FLOOD PERIL

Mississippi Reaches the Highest Stage on Record at Memphis.

Boats Used in Some Streets and Lumber Mills Closed — Break in the Levee Feared—Railroad Traffic Interrupted.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., March 15.—The flood situation between Caruthersville, Mo., and Baton Rouge, La., is serious to-night. The river is rising rapidly and it will be little short of marvelous if the levees hold the great volume of rushing water. The gauge at Memphis to-night marks 38.5 feet, a rise of one and two-tenths feet since last night. This is the highest water ever recorded here, and Local Observer Emery, of the Weather Bureau, said to-night that 39½ feet would be registered by Tuesday. Those interested have been warned to prepare for a stage of 40 feet.

The situation in and around Memphis is becoming more threatening. Without a single exception the numerous lumber plants in North Memphis have suspended operations, owing to the encroachment of the waters. At Fourth and Market Streets, people are moving about in skiffs, and the street railway has annulled all schedules in this part of the city. Three of the Illinois Central tracks are under water north of Auction Street, although traffic has not been suspended on them. If the water continues to rise trouble is expected there. At Ensley, six miles below Memphis, five hundred feet of the Yazoo and Mississippi Valley tracks are inundated, but they were "cribbed" over to-day, and trains are running through.

The Choctaw Railroad has suspended operations between Hopefield and Wolf River and all trains are being sent over the Memphis bridge.

A dangerous place in the levee is reported from Holly Bush, twenty miles north of here. Engineers of the St. Francis Levee Board went to the scene this afternoon. It was found that the water was running over the levee for a distance of 600 feet. Men and material are being sent there, and a strong effort is making to hold the embankment, but it is believed that a break will be made in a day or two. Refugees with hundreds of horses and mules continue to arrive here on every boat.

Thousands of people lined the river banks to-day watching the swift-moving current, and several excursion steamboats carried many more up and down the river so a good view of the vast expanse of water could be had.

LEVEES IN MISSISSIPPI HOLD.

VICKSBURG, Miss., March 15.—The river gauge here this evening registered 40.7, a two-tenth rise since morning. To-day has been the first clear day in two weeks, and with a cessation of the rains there is a corresponding rise in the spirits of the dwellers behind the levees. Late reports state that all embankments are holding on both sides of the river in this section. The sawmill in the suburb of Waltonville, on the lake front, is threatened by back water, and a complete shutdown of all the plants probably will result. Refugees from the lowlands, with cattle and household goods, continue to arrive in every sort of craft, from a steamboat to a home-made raft.

Night trains on the Yazoo and Mississippi Valley Railroad between Vicksburg and New Orleans have been annulled. Bad condition of track below Baton Rouge is given as the cause. Traffic on the north and south ends of Memphis and Vicksburg has been suspended entirely, owing to the washing away of a trestle at Lake View.

JACKSON, Miss., March 15.—Gov. Longino has returned from Greenville and other points along the Mississippi River, where he went to look after the levees. He reports them still holding, but getting weak in some places. Major Dabney, Chief Engineer of the Levee Board, has great confidence in the levee system, believing it will stand the pressure, even if it continues raining. To-day the Governor communicated with the Levee Board by telephone, and at its request ordered all the convicts on three plantations—about 100—sent to the Huntington Levee, the weakest section on the system. In all about 300 convicts are now engaged in levee work.

NATCHEZ, Miss., March 15.—Capt. Harry S. Douglas of the United States Engineer Corps has ordered 75,000 feet of lumber, 40,000 sacks, and a carload of wheelbarrows and shovels for use on the levees between Vicksburg and Natchez. The Government is furnishing the material, but the local authorities must furnish the labor. A weak place has been found in Concordia Parish, La., eighteen miles below Vidalia. The weather is clear. The river is 47.8, or 3 feet above the danger line, and rising.

NEW ORLEANS, March 15.—The gauge here to-night reads a little over 19.3, which is only two-tenths below the record of 1897, but the sudden change from stormy weather to sunshine and brightness has given renewed hope all along the line. Saturday's terrific rain was a test in itself, and not a sign of weakness was displayed. With good weather more workers have been enlisted and more work rushed, and even those who were ready to surrender weak places to the river's rush have gained courage and say any volume of water can be met.

JUSTICE DAY DOING WELL.

His Physicians Report That His Condition Is Good and His Symptoms Favorable.

WASHINGTON, March 15.—The condition of Justice Day of the United States Supreme Court, who is ill here with pneumonia, continues encouraging. Dr. E. L. Hardin, the attending physician, had Dr. William Osler, the specialist from Johns Hopkins University, come over to-day for another consultation with him regarding the case, and after it was concluded they issued the following bulletin:

"Justice Day's condition good. There has been no extension of the pneumonia. All symptoms favorable."

After his last visit at 11 o'clock to-night Dr. Hardin issued the following bulletin:

"Justice Day's condition continues good and he is comfortable to-night."

The Justice is still in a very serious condition, but his family are hopeful that he will recover.

INVITES JOHN BURROUGHS.

The President Asks the Author to Accompany Him to Yellowstone Park.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, March 15.—John Burroughs of West Park, the well-known writer, has received from President Roosevelt an invitation to accompany the President on a trip to Yellowstone Park. Mr. Burroughs, who accepted the invitation, says:

"I do not know when the trip will be, but I think it will be just as soon as the Senate adjourns. It is doubtful whether there will be any hunting."

An interesting fact in connection with the invitation is that it came in a letter inspired by Mr. Burroughs's article in a March periodical which the President had been reading.

MAYOR JOINS A BOYCOTT.

Evansville (Ind.) City Officials Turn Off the Gas in Their Homes.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., March 15.—Mayor Charles G. Covert and several members of his Cabinet find themselves compelled to discontinue the use of gas in their homes. This comes as a result of their being members of labor unions. The Mayor and other city officers had the gas turned off in their homes yesterday.

All were notified by the Central Labor Union, which has placed a boycott against the Evansville Gas and Electric Light Company, either to discontinue the use of gas or be suspended by the unions.

DOLPHIN'S CREW SAVE FIVE LIVES AT HAVANA.

Rescue Cubans Who Were Drowning in the Harbor During a Squall—At Least Five Perished.

HAVANA, March 15.—While Secretary Moody and his party were making an informal visit on shore this afternoon a squall of tremendous violence swept over the harbor. It became as dark as night, and the wind and the downpour were terrific.

Commander Stoney of the Dolphin, realizing the peril to the small boats in the harbor during such a squall, called for volunteer rescuers. The entire crew of the Dolphin responded. Boats were instantly manned and sent off.

The launch returned with four half-drowned Cubans and the Captain's gig with another, who was lifted aboard apparently lifeless, but was later resuscitated. The courage and prompt action on the part of the Americans are especially commended as the British ships did not rise to the emergency, although one of the capsized boats was much nearer to the Ariadne than to the Dolphin. Secretary Moody will summon the Dolphin's crew before him to-morrow and commend them for their pluck and presence of mind.

It is known that five men, all Cubans, were drowned by the capsizing of boats during the squall.

This has been an interesting day in Havana. The British squadron, consisting of the warships Ariadne, Indefatigable, Retribution, Tribune, Fantome, and Columbine arrived this morning from Kingston, Jamaica. The entire morning was consumed in exchanges of salutes and calls.

The Ariadne, Vice Admiral Sir Archibald Douglas's flagship, on entering the harbor, saluted the fort with twenty-one guns, to which Cabanas Fortress replied. The Ariadne then saluted Secretary Moody, who arrived here yesterday with a Congressional party on the Dolphin, with seventeen guns. The Dolphin responded with a similar salute.

The Dolphin then saluted Vice Admiral Douglas with fifteen guns and the Ariadne acknowledged the compliment with the same number of guns.

Vice Admiral Douglas then summoned the commanders of the British warships to his flagship and the party proceeded to the Dolphin and paid their respects to Mr. Moody. The Dolphin fired fifteen guns on their departure. Secretary Moody then visited Vice Admiral Douglas and the Ariadne saluted him with seventeen guns. The saluting ended by the firing of thirteen guns by the Dolphin in honor of a call on Mr. Moody by Gen. Rodrigues, the commander of the Cuban army.

Secretary Moody and his party dined to-day with Minister Squires. They will pay visits to President Palma and the members of his Cabinet to-morrow. Tuesday they will proceed to Bahia Honda, and on returning to Havana will go to Santiago by rail and return on the Dolphin. They will look over the site for the naval station and general situation at Guantanamo.

The officers of the British squadron dined this evening with the British Minister at Havana.

REJECTED LOVER KILLS.

William S. Morse Shoots Miss Julia Toombs at Providence, R. I.—Had Been in an Insane Asylum.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 15.—Miss Julia Toombs, twenty-three years old, was shot and killed to-day by William Stevens Morse, a rejected lover, who during the past three months has been twice in an insane asylum.

The young woman started from her home this morning to attend church, a mile or more distant, and had almost arrived there when Morse, who evidently had been shadowing her, overtook her. He had walked a short distance with her when Miss Toombs appealed to a citizen to escort her to the church. Morse, however, is a big, strapping fellow, and he acted in so threatening a manner that the citizen turned about and left the pair.

The girl proceeded alone, but Morse followed, and, drawing a revolver, fired four shots at her, every shot taking effect. One bullet passed through her heart. She died almost instantly. Morse was captured.

Morse was born at New Britain, Conn., twenty-nine years ago. When ten years of age he made an attempt to kill his eleven-year-old sister with a butcher's knife, and served several years in the Connecticut State Reformatory in consequence. He came to this city about two years ago, and last Summer secured work as a motorman on the street cars. He fell in love with Miss Toombs and asked her to marry him, but she refused. Morse left this city for a few weeks, but turned again, and his love became threatening in his manner toward Miss Toombs. The girl was terrorized and afraid to leave her home.

Finally Morse was arrested last October and committed to the State Hospital for the Insane. On Jan. 15 he was released. He enlisted almost immediately in the navy. In two weeks' time he returned to this city on leave of absence and renewed his threats to Miss Toombs. On Jan. 28 he was recommitted to the asylum. On Feb. 19 he was turned over to officers from the Charlestown Navy Yard, and Saturday last he was discharged on account of physical disability.

BLUE RIBBON BARTENDERS.

Men Who Sell Drinks in Chicago Organize a Total Abstinence Society.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, March 15.—Bartenders with the blue ribbon knotted on their white vests may be serving drinks in Chicago soon, as the "Chicago Bartenders and Saloon Keepers' Total Abstinence Society" was formed to-day with a charter membership of sixteen.

The bartenders say they have adopted total abstinence in self-defense and in the interest of their employers.

From figures presented at the meeting it was shown that fully one-third of the bartenders and saloon owners of Chicago are abstainers. In many of the large saloons the proprietors will not employ a man who drinks.

PROMOTER WRIGHT ARRESTED ON A LINER

He Had Booked on La Lorraine as "M. Andreone."

ABSCONDED FROM ENGLAND

Accompanied by Woman Described as His Niece—Wanted for London and Globe Finance Corporation Affair.

Whitaker Wright, Managing Director of the London and Globe Finance Corporation, Limited, in search of whom twelve Scotland Yard detectives are now scouring Europe, unexpectedly turned up in New York yesterday morning and was quickly apprehended and placed under arrest by Central Office Detectives Lesson and Moody, acting under instructions from Inspector McClusky, who had received a cablegram from the London authorities concerning the missing promoter.

Wright, who for years was the most prominent promoter in London and the Managing Director of a concern that, with many other smaller affairs, was supposed to represent a nominal capital of more than $111,000,000, was a passenger on the French liner Lorraine, and it was in less than five minutes after the ship had been berthed and the gangplank hoisted that Moody and Leeson placed him under arrest.

At first Wright seemed greatly astonished and told the detectives that he was under the impression that the whole matter had been settled in Parliament. He was taken to Police Headquarters, where Inspector McClusky examined him and then told Moody and Leeson to take him to the Tombs Police Court. This was done and the prisoner was arraigned before Magistrate Barlow, who, on the production by United States Marshals Blake and McAveny of a warrant for Wright's arrest, turned the prisoner over to the Government's representatives. They marched him over to the Ludlow Street Jail, where he was locked up pending arraignment before United States Commissioner Alexander this morning.

Wright, accompanied by a young woman, boarded the Lorraine last Saturday a week ago at Havre. He booked under the name of M. Andreone and she as Mlle. Andreone. After the voyage had begun the officers of the ship passed, as is the custom, a number of blanks to the passengers for them to write their names on. When the Andreones' blanks were returned the man's name was written "J. J. Wright," while his companion had written her name "Miss Browne." This caused a good deal of speculation on board, and when asked about the change in his name he explained that the young woman was his niece and that the booking of them as Andreone was an error and he wished to have it corrected.

After this and for the rest of the voyage the young woman kept to her cabin, but Wright came on deck every day and would walk up and down the smoking room alone, aloof from the other passengers. He and his companion had one of the finest suites on the liner, the rooms being 116, 118, and 120, on the port side. The absence of Miss Browne from the ship dining saloon and on fair weather days from the deck was explained by Wright to an officer of the ship. He said that she was ill and did not care to venture out.

When the Lorraine neared the end of her voyage, it is said Wright made efforts to arrange to leave the vessel before she reached her pier. He suggested that a tug or some other steam craft might be sighted on the way up the bay, and induced to come alongside and take him and Miss Browne off. The proposition was considered and the decision was adverse, so they had to land at the pier with the other passengers. It was just 8:25 o'clock when the Lorraine was moored to her pier and the gangplank placed in position. Detectives Leeson and Moody were on the pier, as were also United States Marshals McAveny and Blake, as well as two Pinkerton detectives. All were on the lookout for the London promoter, and each had a description of him in his pocket, and a copy of a Scotland Yard cablegram asking for the man's apprehension and arrest.

HIS CABLED DESCRIPTION.

The cablegram was from Sir Edward Bradford, the Commissioner of Police, and was addressed to Inspector McClusky, who received it last Thursday. A similar dispatch had been sent to the Pinkerton agency. It read:

Absconded—Charged on warrant with fraud to large amount, property of the London and Globe Financial Corporation of this city. Age, 50; height, 5 feet 10 or 11 inches; florid complexion; hair red and mustache dark; large head; small eyes; receding forehead; small chin, with large roll of flesh beneath; stout build; 15 stone; wears gold pince-nez, with gold chain attached. Photo with slight American account. Please arrest if possible and wire to Commissioner of City of London Police.

The Central Office detectives were the first to board the liner. Both Leeson and Moody are regularly assigned to work on steamship piers on the North River, and the morning papers had published cablegrams intimating that Wright was in Egypt they had no idea that the man was on board the French vessel. While walking down the promenade deck they passed the suits of rooms occupied by Wright. One of the doors was ajar and through the small opening Leeson caught a good look at the man's face. He stood a moment gazing and then whispered to Moody:

"That's the man as sure as you're alive. You stay here and keep watch on him while I run back and have a little chat with the purser to make certain."

This Moody did, and learned from the purser that the name of the passenger was Wright, but that he had sailed from Havre under the name of Andreone. This convinced Leeson that he had his man, and he hurried back to Moody with the tidings. In the room with Wright at the time was Miss Browne, who was getting ready to leave. As she passed out of the door the officers walked in and addressed him as "Mr. Wright."

"That is my name," was the reply.

"Well, if you are Whitaker Wright you are under arrest!" said Leeson.

"What!" came the exclamation, uttered with apparent astonishment.

"We cannot help it," the detectives told him. "We are acting at the request of the London police, and will have to take you to Headquarters."

"That was purely a business transaction," Wright is said to have explained, "and I was under the impression that everything had been settled in Parliament. It is indeed a great surprise to me. However, I am willing to go with you, and I wish you would get me away as quietly as possible. And may I ask you to please keep this from the newspapers?"

"Sure," chorused Moody and Leeson.

Then they escorted him to the deck, where Miss Browne was waiting for him to accompany her to the pier to have their luggage examined. Wright, when he reached the young woman's side, asked her to step aside and acquainted her with what had happened. He told Miss Browne of his surprise at his arrest, and also that he was willing to go to Police Headquarters they said, as one of them pulled a paper from his pocket.

"Well, he is our prisoner now," said the Central Office men, "and we will have to take him to Headquarters. You will probably get him later."

When Wright arrived at the Tombs Court from the Headquarters the Marshals were there and secured him on producing their warrant.

At the jail he was searched, but the only things he had in his pockets were a penknife, a pencil, a small amount of money, and a letter or two. There were no incriminating papers. The newspaper men sent their cards to the cell and asked for an interview, and he sent the following written reply:

"Mr. Whitaker Wright presents his compliments to the press of New York, and regrets that he has nothing to say this afternoon."

THE FLIGHT OF MISS BROWNE.

Meanwhile Wright's companion remained at the pier to look after the luggage. With those of Wright, there were in all a dozen trunks to be examined. She had to wait for half an hour before she could be attended to, and all this time she leaned against the pier wall with her face buried in her hands, apparently greatly affected at what had taken place. She has a pleasant face and a trim figure, and was the subject of many sympathetic remarks.

When a reporter approached her the young woman asked if he wanted her, too. When told that she was not "wanted," and asked if she had anything to say about Wright's arrest, she replied:

"I do not see how anything that I could say would be of interest to the public. I am Mr. Wright's niece and I am going to visit friends."

By this time all the luggage was on the pier and a Customs Inspector advanced to examine it. Miss Browne said she did not have all the keys to the trunks, and asked that those that she could open be examined and that she be allowed to leave the pier. This was done, and she went to the Albemarle Hotel, where she registered as "Miss F. Browne, England." A few hours later, the hotel clerk said, she paid her bill, and, calling a cab, was driven away. He did not know where she went.

PROMOTER'S WIFE TRUSTS HIM.

Says His One Desire Is to Do Something for the Unfortunate Stockholders—She Is an American.

LONDON, March 15.—Whitaker Wright's wife and family are still in England, and, so far as the police have ascertained, none of his relatives has left the country. Whitaker Wright left London about Feb. 21 and went direct to Paris, where he stayed about four days before proceeding to Havre to embark on the Lorrsine.

Mrs. Wright, who is living in comparative seclusion near Godalming, Surrey, was interviewed this evening. She looked ill with anxiety. She reiterated her belief that her husband was on his way to Egypt for the sake of his health, the doctors having declared that a rest was imperative. His one desire, she said, has been to do something for the unfortunate shareholders, and the worry told severely on him. He had remarked that if there ever was any trouble he must recover his strength to enable him to carelessly meet the charges brought against him. She had heard from him at Paris, but he did not mention his movements.

When told that he had been arrested in New York she said she supposed he must have met friends in Paris who persuaded him to change his mind and go to New York, perhaps on his way to the mines in British Columbia.

Asked whether her husband was an American citizen, he having, it is said, claimed to have been naturalized, Mrs. Wright replied:

"I do not know. I am an American. We were married in America. He has always been thoroughly English, much to my disgust. If he had been an American he would have been properly protected."

Mrs. Wright concluded by stating that eminent counsel would be engaged in her husband's defense, and she hoped that his health would enable him to make a vigorous defense.

The lawyers acting in the case anticipate no difficulty in obtaining Whitaker Wright's extradition. The Government will give every assistance, and it is expected that Wright will be in London in six weeks' time.

The papers this morning compliment the detectives upon their satisfaction that Wright was not permitted to evade arrest, and hope that there will not be a repetition of the long delay in securing a trial which occurred in the case of the notorious company swindler, Jabez Balfour, who fled to Argentina.

The Daily Mail comments rather scathingly upon the opinion expressed by the Attorney General that there was not sufficient case against Wright and upon the obstructive tactics which have been employed to prevent the affairs of the London and Globe Corporation from being investigated.

WHITAKER WRIGHT'S CAREER.

Promoter's Vast Schemes, Begun in New York, Secured for Him Great Wealth and Social Recognition.

The career of Whitaker Wright has been a remarkable one. He is said to have been born in Cheshire, England, and about twenty years ago came to the United States, settling in Philadelphia, where he engaged in the grain and petroleum brokerage business. From Philadelphia he came to New York, where he was a grain broker. In this city he is understood to have started his Australian gold mining business. He formed a number of companies to exploit those mines, and as a result of this exploitation is credited with having made something like $15,000,000. It was his success in this Australian venture that was the foundation of his London operations.

The London and Globe Finance Corporation, Limited, was formed to take over the securities of the various mining concerns in which Wright was interested, as well as such other securities as the corporation saw fit to deal in. This was the beginning of the promotion of those gigantic affairs that gave to Whitaker Wright the reputation of being one of the greatest promoters in the history of London.

With his rise in the financial world he also became prominent to a certain extent in the social life of the metropolis. He numbered among his friends many of the highest peers in the realm, and is said to have enjoyed the friendship of King Edward. In London he lived in a magnificent house located on Park Lane, while his offices in Moorgate Street, near the Bank of England, were said to be the most gorgeous in the City. His country home at Godalming, Surrey, was especially sumptuous, being embellished with precious woods and rare works of art.

He became an enthusiastic yachtsman, and in 1898 bought from Lord Ashburton the beautiful steam yacht Venetia, which he renamed the Sybarita, and on which he made many extended cruises. He made himself popular in the yachting world by donating many valuable prizes for British and Riviera Yacht Clubs to compete for. At one time he was the Rear Commodore of the Portsmouth Corinthian Yacht Club, and was a member of the Royal Cinque Ports, Royal Dorset, Royal Temple, Royal Thames, and Royal Victoria Yacht Clubs.

THE LONDON AND GLOBE CRASH.

It was in December, 1900, that the financial crash due to the failure of the London and Globe Finance Corporation, Limited, occurred. It came with a suddenness that paralyzed many great business houses, and which resulted in the ruin of many members of the Stock Exchange. The Marquis of Dufferin and Ava was the Honorary President of the concern, and his grief and worry over the disaster hastened that honored nobleman's death.

On Friday, Dec. 28, when the brokers on the Stock Exchange delivered stock purchased on account of the London and Globe Finance Corporation, and asked for payment, the checks presented in payment were dishonored. The next day the concern suspended, and with that suspension came the failure of thirteen firms, included in the list being eight members of the London Stock Exchange.

The concern was a speculative financing affair, capitalized at $80,675,000. In addition to the Marquis of Dufferin, the Directors included Lieut. Gen. the Hon. Somerset J. Gough-Calthorpe, Colonel of the Fife Lowland Guards, and Lord Edward William Pelham-Clinton, Master of the Queen's Household. After the suspension an extraordinary general meeting of the corporation was called to meet in London on Jan. 7. At this meeting Lord Dufferin and Whitaker Wright were present. When Lord Dufferin arose to speak he was hooted. When Lord Dufferin finally got a chance to be heard he made such a frank and sincere statement of his connection with the concern that he won not only the sympathy of his auditors, but of the country. Lord Dufferin's wealth, at one time large, is believed to have been practically used up in the companies of which the London and Globe Corporation was the parent.

When Lord Dufferin had concluded his explanation Whitaker Wright took the floor and announced that the Directors had practically completed arrangements with the creditors and that the concern would be on a smooth sailing basis in short time. He then asked for an adjournment until the following Monday, when, he said, he would submit a plan of reorganization that would insure the company's future prosperity. The reconstruction plan failed.

On Aug. 30 following Wright figured in another exciting session, the occasion being the meeting of the shareholders of the Le Roi Mining Company, one of the subsidiary concerns of the London and Globe Finance Corporation. At this meeting Wright was not present, and when the reports of officers were made there were angry cries as to his whereabouts. He is on the telephone," answered one of those present, "and says to elect some new Directors, as all but two of them have resigned." One month later Justice Wright ordered the compulsory liquidation of the corporation, owing to serious allegations of fraud in its management. When this was done Lord Dufferin, Lord Pelham-Clinton, Mr. Leman, and Wright asked for the fullest investigation of the affairs of the concern.

In two weeks the official receiver of the corporation made a gloomy report to the shareholders, and told them that there was nothing left for them. He said that apparently none of the Directors, except Wright, knew anything about the enormous transactions of the corporation. The balance sheet for 1900 he characterised as "a work of art," some of the entries inflating the assets by as much as £317,000, while Gold Estate shares, valued at £300,000, had within a few days been offered at £704,000. Of the reserve be said £500,000 had been absorbed, and that there was nothing to show for it. Concerning Le Roi No. 2 Mine he said that Wright was the only Director who made anything out of it. He got about £60,000. The receiver then showed how one sum of £256,000 had first figured as an asset on the balance sheet of the London and Globe Finance Corporation, then on the balance sheet of the British-America Company, and then again on the London and Globe, all within the space of three months. The big corporation's flotations numbered forty-one, with a capital of £111,700,000, all of which are either in liquidation, absorbed, or defunct.

DEMAND FOR PROSECUTION.

All this time Wright had not been arrested, and finally there was a great outcry against the authorities for not prosecuting him and his fellow-Directors of the concern. This outcry reached a head in January last, when a petition was circulated on the London Stock Exchange, signed by many influential men asking for the prosecution of the promoter, as it was considered that the credit of the City and of the London Stock Exchange demanded a thorough investigation. By this means a fund of £5,000 was raised to prosecute Wright.

Arnold White, the author, at a meeting said the reason the prosecution was not undertaken by the Government was that the Directors of the London and Globe were sheltering themselves behind members of the royal family. He added that he understood a royal Duke had invested his money in the concern, and he believed that "certain hangers-on at Court" were using the name of the King and others for the purpose of hiding their own nefarious deeds. Other speakers at this meeting declared that the stockholders of the London and Globe were victims of one of the most terrible, heartless, and gigantic swindles of the present age."

On Tuesday last action was taken against Wright. Justice Buckeley, in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, made an order directing the official receiver, as liquidator of the London and Globe Finance Corporation, Limited, to prosecute on a criminal charge Whitaker Wright, and utilize the assets of the London and Globe to pay the costs of the prosecution. The following day a warrant for Wright's arrest was issued. When the police officer went to his home he was informed that Wright had gone to the Continent on account of his health.

HARVARD-YALE AGREEMENT.

Arbitration Committee Named, Whose Decisions Shall Be Final.

The Yale undergraduates Friday night indorsed the report of the Yale Conference Committee on the new Harvard-Yale athletic agreement and eligibility rules. Coming at the end of a long and difficult series of negotiations, during which it looked at times as if the two universities could not agree as to a common ground, and during which Prof. Hollis, the Harvard athletic chief, publicly expressed his opinion that the annual football game between the two colleges should be discontinued, the successful termination of the conferences was enthusiastically received at Yale.

A full explanation of the new agreement was made at the Yale mass meeting Friday night. The feature of the new rules is the naming of a joint Arbitration Committee, to consist of one Harvard, one Yale, and one Columbia graduate, to whom all questions in dispute between the two universities are to be referred, and the appointment of a similar committee at Yale and at Harvard, to consist of three graduates, who shall act as advisors to the team Captains. By this system it is anticipated that there will be no further discussion of eligibility questions or of the interpretation of the new rules. The Yale and Harvard reference committees will act as minor courts, to whom all questions as to eligibility may be referred and where the Captains may leave the solution of any interpretation of the rules particular cases bring up. Failing solution in this court, the question at issue goes to the Arbitration Committee, whose decision is final. This committee is to be made up of William Meikelham, for Columbia, acting as a neutral; Otto T. Bannard of Yale, and R. D. Wrenn of Harvard. It is not likely the Yale Conference Committee members stated Friday night, that this commission will be called upon for duty, as the minor reference committees will in most cases be able to decide satisfactorily all knotty questions. Reference to the Arbitration Committee would then only come in case of division in the lower court.

A noticeable feature of the new agreement is that, with the exception of the new committee mentioned above, the remaining rules are not radically different from those now in force at the two institutions. What was best in the individual systems of both universities has been made to cover both. This Yale has always held that undergraduate Captains as the only authority in selecting players and deciding the interpretation of rules. Harvard has never had this system, but has had instead a graduate Advisory Committee. The Yale Captain authority is written into the new regulations in the clause holding him entirely responsible for the eligibility of his men, this new idea being now placed in Harvard's scheme. On the other hand, Harvard's graduate Advisory Committee is written into Yale's rules, Yale now having for the first time such a court of minor appeal as Harvard has always had.

As to the eligibility rules themselves Yale undergraduates are thoroughly satisfied that the very best interests of college sport have been protected by the new rulings. The rules are drawn tighter as to undergraduate participation in university athletics, and a wholesome reform has been inaugurated in the treatment of the perplexing graduate school athlete question. The one-year residence rule is now to be strictly enforced, making it impossible for a student of another institution to take Yale or Harvard either in the undergraduate or graduate department and play on any team until he has completed one full year of work. Furthermore, no graduate of any other college or student of any other college may join a freshman football or baseball team, or a crew, thus limiting freshman organizations to students in their first year for their first degree. While comparatively unimportant, this latter rule is a wholesome change for the better, both Yale and Harvard, in previous years and this year, having noted athletes of other institutions ineligible for Varsity athletics on their freshman football and baseball teams and on their crews. Two years ago a serious rupture was imminent on the Thames because of the natural well-known Western college oarsmen who represented both Yale and Harvard on their freshman crews.

In the matter of new rules regarding possible candidates for Varsity organizations, the new rules are not greatly unlike the existing rules of both institutions. They are, however, now identical. Briefly future Yale and Harvard ineligibility is to be determined by the following restrictions: If a man has been dropped, and has not regained his class; if he is on Faculty probation, (though sickness and failure to pass entrance examinations are exceptions to this rule;) if he changes from one department to another while under Faculty ban; if he is a graduate student, and has not been one full year in the university; if he is an undergraduate, and has played upon any other university team, until he has resided one full year; if he has represented his university or universities in any athletic contests for four years; if he has ever accepted pay for teaching or taking part in any athletic exhibitions. The new rules are not retroactive, those men now in college being regarded as coming under the present rules in vogue at each institution.

POLICE SUNDAY ACTIVITY

Schmittberger Worrying Law Breakers in His District.

Capt. O'Connor, Tenderloin's New Commander, Tells What His Policy Will Be—Eighty-two Excise Arrests.

As Commissioner Greene held no Sunday conference with the newspaper men yesterday, interest in Police Department affairs centred in the doings of Inspector Max Schmittberger in the First Inspection District and of Capt. John W. O'Connor, the new commander of the Tenderloin. The former spent the day in looking over the results of his declared policy of stirring up the ex-Red Light District, Capt. O'Conner's activities were confined to a walk around his precinct in the early afternoon and a talk to reporters in the evening.

In this talk Capt. O'Connor disclaimed the title of "Czar," which had been applied to him as a matter of inheritance, and said that while he knew the precinct from previous experience, its characters, and "joints," he did not intend to proceed with brass bands and circus wagons. As Capt. O'Connor put it:

"I know where the Haymarket is and I know the location of the station house. I claim also to know something about the Tenderloin, since I have been in and out of it more or less during the twenty-five years of my police experience. I know, too, the people here who can be handled without gloves and those who cannot. As for the poolrooms and gambling houses, my method will be something like that of Inspector Walsh in that I shall endeavor to get evidence against the various places before I come down on them. I have no intention of breaking in by the old method without due process of law, but where I do strike I intend that the blow shall be felt.

"Inspector McClusky of the Detective Bureau and I will work together, and I shall call upon the men of his department to get evidence against any or all kinds of lawbreakers as the occasion demands. I know most of my own men by reputation, and expect them to do good work. If they do not work well I will get new men. There will be no radical steps."

Capt. O'Connor's tour in the afternoon took him pretty thoroughly about his precinct, and he took occasion to inspect from the outside the various places still reputed to be gambling houses. He said afterward that he was well satisfied with the conditions so far as he could observe at a first glance. The precinct was quiet generally through the day and evening, and while it was by no means "dry," the saloons doing a considerable business had a watchful guard on post, and only those who were "known" could find admittance.

In the evening Capt. O'Connor, on instructions from Commissioner Greene, sent men to all the theatres where "burlesque" concert were going on with instructions to watch the performances carefully for violations of the law, but not to make immediate arrests for violations. The scheme underlying this new move, and thought to be prompted somewhat by the discharge in quarters of a majority of the "pinched" arrested last Sunday night, is to have the officers warn proprietors, and then, if violations are observed, to apply in court for warrants the next day.

Having passed a strenuous night, the east side, in so far as it is included in the First Inspection District, awoke yesterday to find the officers of the several precincts making the rounds with eyes open for excise violations. The storm centre was, of course, the lower side of the Bowery where Inspector Schmittberger, with his own men and those of the Eldridge Street and East Fifth Street Stations, the latter under Capt. Charles Kemp, newly promoted, closed up all "joints" promptly at 12 Saturday night. Some proprietors there were who had received Saturday night visits and thought to make a night or two until the coast of a peaceful Sunday. They were doomed to disappointment.

Commenting upon the discharge in court yesterday of several prisoners taken in places cleaned out Saturday night, Inspector Schmittberger said:

"I don't care whether the Magistrates hold them or not. The proposition is to make these places unprofitable, and that is what I intend to do. The majority of the Raines law hotels in this district are running as virtual disorderly houses, in open violation of the law, and the reason that they have run so far is that they haven't been 'pounded' in the past. I think I've stirred them up some these last two Saturday nights, and I am going to keep on doing it until men and women will not congregate, for fear of having the police tumble in on them at any minute."

Down in Police Street Precinct it was very quiet yesterday, and there was no disposition on the part of any of the gangs of tough characters to engage in any of the fights that have made the district notorious. The sentences pronounced on several prisoners arrested in one of these fights during the week past is thought to have had a salutary effect. In the Madison Street Precinct Detectives Driscoll and Hown corralled six members of the "Gappers," a gang infesting Hamilton and other adjacent streets, for fighting among themselves in front of a house at 81 Hamilton Street, and no further disturbance was reported during the day.

Capt. Kemp led in the arrests for the violation of the excise law, his men making eleven in all. There were 82 arrests throughout the city, as against 62 the Sunday before.

GEN. GREENE RAIDS PEDDLERS.

Police Commissioner Greene's usual Sunday automobile tour yesterday took him to the stations in the Bronx. Accompanied by Secretary Courtney and Inspector Titus he visited the Alexander Avenue, Bronx Park, Westchester, High Bridge, and Tremont Stations.

When the party left the Bronx Park to go to the Tremont Station, the way led down Pelham Avenue. The fine weather had brought out thousands of visitors to the Zoological Gardens, and to cater to them a large number of peddlers with pushcarts laden with peanuts, candies, bananas, &c., had turned out and lined each side of Pelham Avenue for a long distance.

When the Tremont Avenue station was reached Gen. Greene held a consultation with Capt. Donovan and Inspector Titus. As a result a few moments later a patrol wagon left with eight policemen inside, and proceeded to Pelham Avenue.

As soon as the peddlers saw the patrol wagon there was a wild scramble to get away, and many of the pushcarts were overturned. The small boy reaped a rich harvest, and the monkeys never had such a feast as they were treated to a little later.

The round-up resulted in the arrest of fourteen peddlers, who were charged with violating a city ordinance.

SPLIT IN BOWLING RANKS.

New York bowlers took the first step toward a separation from the American Bowling Congress at a mass meeting held under the auspices of the New York Bowling Association at Thum's White Elephant Alleys, Thirty-first Street and Broadway, yesterday afternoon.

It was decided by a unanimous vote to refuse to recognize three new rules adopted at the recent session of the American Bowling Congress at Indianapolis, which respectively allow the use of loaded balls, increase the dues of tournaments from $2 each to $3 for every club in each tournament, and recognize as a bowling club any club which rolls in a tournament at least once in two weeks.

The loaded ball is opposed on the ground that it would build up a class of expert bowlers who would cause ordinary players to become discouraged and so lose interest in the game. That rule regarding the eligibility of clubs is declared to open the doors to "mushroom" clubs having no actual organization, and the increase in the dues was said to be for the purpose of paying salaries to the officers of the congress and the officials of the National tournament.

It was decided to petition the New York Bowling Association to insert in its playing rules a prohibition of the loaded ball, while the rule of the association which permits only regularly organized clubs bowling at least once a week during the season on their own or leased alleys was emphatically indorsed.

As a majority of the delegates to the New York Bowling Association were present at the meeting yesterday, there is no doubt that the association, at its next meeting on April 20, will insert the prohibition against the loaded ball in its playing rules, as requested by the meeting. This will place the New York Bowling Association, which includes every important league in this city or vicinity, in direct opposition to the American Bowling Congress, and will complete the separation begun at yesterday's meeting. Copies of the resolutions adopted by the New York bowlers will be sent to the officers of the American Bowling Congress, after which no further notice of that organization will be taken by the local bowlers unless the obnoxious rules should be repealed, which it is not expected will be done. It is more likely that the New York Bowling Association at its next meeting will receive applications for membership from leagues in this State outside of this city from New Jersey, or Connecticut, in which case the question of enlarging the scope of the association so as to include the entire East may be considered.

Practically every prominent bowling league or club in the city was represented at the meeting, among the delegates being: Dr. H. Timm, Fidelis Bowling Club; H. Simon, Bleecker Bowling Club; J. Bonneau, Century Wheelmen; W. H. Fisher, Invincible Bowling Club; J. Lesley, National Bowling League; A. Endres, Germania National League; W. A. Spring, Buffalo Bowling Club; J. Thum, American National Tournament; C. Johnson, United Bowling Clubs; O. Mafer, Spartan Bowling Club; W. Rothermel, Fidelis Bowling Club; William Cordes, Grand Central Tournament, Brooklyn; R. L. Gillespie, Pin Knight Bowling Club; E. Jacobi, Tompkins Square Bowling Club; A. T. French, New York Bowling League; A. Curtis, Echo Bowling League; H. McClelland, Hudson Bowling Club; G. Murphy, Brooklyn Bowling League; J. Wragge, Harlem Bowling League; F. Lehrbach, United Bowling Clubs; W. Trefton, New York Inter-Club League; A. Mahn, Hetherbutel Bowling Club; F. J. Riddell, Spartan Bowling Club; C. H. Ebbetts, Brooklyn Inter-Club League; T. Johannsmeyer, Columbia League; F. G. Snyder, North Side League; S. Timm, Fidelis Bowling Club; N. Jackson, Greater New York Tournament; T. S. Buckingham, Sylvan Bowling Club; J. M. Keesler, Claremont Bowling Club; E. Bushhols, Rosedale Bowling Club; J. Schilling, Rosedale Bowling Club; J. Sowadie, Gotham Bowling Club, and W. Granger, Sylvan Bowling Club.

FRIEND OF BURDICK TELLS OF SIGNIFICANT LETTERS.

Thinks Motive for the Murder Might Have Been Desire to Suppress Divorce Scandal.

BUFFALO, March 15.—The Express tomorrow will print an interview with a person who at one time was a stockholder in the Buffalo Envelope Company, and for twelve years a close friend of Edwin L. Burdick. The interview in part is as follows:

"I had been acquainted with Mr. Burdick for twelve years prior to his death. I came in almost daily contact with him, and for some time past had been more or less in his confidence. First of all, I want to say something in defense of his character, which has been unjustly maligned by statement and insinuation. Mr. Burdick was a gentleman in every sense of the word.

"This talk about his behavior with women I believe was wholly without foundation.

"Though I knew in the early part of December that Mr. Burdick had made a will cutting off his wife, it was not until shortly after Christmas that I learned anything about the divorce proceedings. He then told me of having begun a suit for divorce in the early part of November.

"I cannot help believing from all I heard from Mr. Burdick that the motive for the crime could have been a desire to suppress the scandal that would have been incident to the trial of a divorce suit.

"Soon after Mr. Burdick told me of his having begun divorce proceedings he showed me a letter he had just received from New York. Mr. Burdick handed me the letter, and I read every word of it.

"In the letter the writer was trying hard to bring about a reconciliation between Mr. Burdick and his wife. She pleaded with Burdick to take 'Allie' back. The writer also wrote in this letter something that Burdick construed as a threat that unless there was a reconciliation there would be a double suicide. I cannot remember the exact words, but they were something like this: 'Do you want to put an end to all our lives?'

"Mr. Burdick pointed out that particular part of the letter to me, and said: 'That means suicide. Well, let them go ahead and do it.'

"It seems to me that this letter ought to be found. What has become of it? Did he have it in his desk in his den at his house, and was it taken by the murderer when rifling the drawer that was found open?

"Another paper that should be found is a list of twenty meeting places that Mr. Burdick had secured for use in his divorce proceedings."

BOYS ADMIT BURGLARIES.

Richard Carney of Cedarhurst, Herbert Hopson of Inwood, and Frank Craft, of Cedarhurst, each eighteen years old, will be arraigned before Magistrate Edmund J. Healey in the Magistrate's Court at Far Rockaway this morning on suspicion of being burglars. Their arrests are thought to clear up the frequent mysterious burglaries and petty thieving committed in this section for the past several months. The Lawrence Village Trustees engaged a number of Pinkerton detectives to patrol the village and run down the offenders, but the robberies continued.

The gang worked in Far Rockaway, in New York City, and in Inwood, Lawrence, Cedarhurst, and Woodmere, in Nassau County just across the line. Several weeks ago the unoccupied Forrest cottage, at Sinnis Beach, was robbed, and several hundred dollars' worth of fine crockery and other valuables carried off.

Carney told the police that he and his two companions, Hopson and Craft, had robbed the Forrest cottage and the cottage of Mrs. Daniel Lord de Lawrence, and Thomas F. White, at Cedarhurst. He said they had carried their loot to Cedarhurst, where they had buried part of it. They had built the hut, in which he was found, some time ago and made this their headquarters.

ARRESTED AT THE WALDORF.

Samuel Herman, Said to be a Lawyer, Acted Strangely and Was Sent to Bellevue.

A man who gave his name as Samuel Herman, aged forty, of 213 West Fourteenth Street, was taken to the West Thirtieth Street Police Station from the Waldorf-Astoria last night, and later sent to Bellevue Insane Pavilion.

Herman attracted the attention of the house detective at the Waldorf early in the evening, when he was seen wandering about the corridor and the rooms on the first floor. He would walk up to many of the women in the place, and either make some remark to them or stare at them so as to cause them to turn away.

Policeman Willemse was called and took him to the station house, where Herman demanded to be released, saying that he had an appointment and using the names of several prominent women as the persons whom he was to meet. The only things found on him when searched were keys and a letter addressed to him and signed "Eva A. Iser, 23 West Eighty-third Street." Miss Iser was found at this address, where she was visiting the Strauss family, who live there. She is from Nashville, Tenn. She said Mr. Herman is a friend. He had escorted her to the opera Saturday evening, when she said she noticed he acted somewhat strangely, and had remarked to her friends that he thought something was the matter with him. She believed his mind had been upset by overstudy. He is a lawyer, she said, and had been admitted to the bar five years ago.

DULUTH PUPILS CHALLENGED.

Special to The New York Times.

DULUTH, Minn., March 15.—Local papers recently commented on the inefficiency of pupils in the Central High School as regards spelling, and now the Duluth Board of Education and the Superintendent of Schools are receiving challenges for spelling matches from the backwoods district Principals and school boards.

A challenge from O. Reiss, Principal of the school at the village of Grand Rapids, well up to the head waters of the Mississippi River, is a fair sample of several. He says he has heard of the inefficiency of the Duluth High School pupils, and proposes a spelling match between picked students. It is not known what action will be taken by the Duluth Board and Superintendent.

Valuable Horse Shot in the Park.

Stewart Sealy of 231 West Sixty-fifth Street was driving through Central Park last night, when on the Central Drive, at Seventieth Street, his horse, which he said was valued at $1,000 and owned by Robert Holmes of 209 West Eighty-sixth Street, stumbled and fell. Speaking a boy, Agent Holmes of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals shot and killed the animal.

RUNAWAY BRONCO HAD THE TIME OF HIS LIFE

Scattered Sunday Crowds and Tried to Enter the Waldorf.

Knocked Down Four Men at Devery's Pump and Smashed Several Windows—Mad Run Begun in Eldridge Street Ended at the City Club.

The usual Sunday quiet of the lower east side, and of the west side from Twenty-third Street to Thirty-fourth Street, was broken yesterday by the mad run of a bronco which had broken from its stall in Eldridge Street, and was not captured until it had upset at least a dozen men who had tried to stop it, besides frightening many who were perfectly willing to give it a wide berth.

It was about 2 o'clock that the stableman at the Eldridge Street stable first noticed that the horse was gone, and together with the proprietor and several friends started in pursuit. They learned that the horse had gone east, and by running at last caught up with a crowd that had seen the horse, and tried to keep up with it. At this time the bronco was not to be seen. He had outfooted his pursuers, and was taking a rapid canter through the east side, scattering to right and left the people out in their holiday attire, enjoying the fine day. Several men seeing the horse pass, and thinking that there would be some sights worth seeing, jumped on bicycles, and were following in the wake of the little beast, now more scared than those who ran out of his way.

After tearing about the east side for about an hour and knocking down several men who were brave enough to try to stop him, the horse in some way worked over to the west side, where he started the same tactics as he had used on the east side. Many residents of the Ninth Ward walking about were startled to see the mad creature rushing from one side of the street to the other, evidently anxious to get out of the excitement he was causing and to get away from the army on bicycles that was following.

At last he reached the corner of Eighth Avenue and Twenty-third Street, and, turning north, started to look over Eighth Avenue.

Near Devery's pump, at the corner of Twenty-eighth Street, four men who had seen him coming rushed directly in his way and tried to catch hold of a small piece of rope which hung about his neck. The horse seemed to mind them not in the least, but ran into them and knocked all four down. He then continued his run to Thirty-fourth Street, where he turned east.

At the corner of Broadway stood four policemen, who heard the shouts of the crowd, and waving their clubs at the frightened animal tried to make it stop. They had no more success than those who had tried before them, and the animal continued its run across Broadway.

Just to the west at this point stood a line of cabs. There was also a large crowd in the street, all of whom seemed to run toward Fifth Avenue in order to get away from the horse. Steaming and covered with a heavy white lather, the bronco stopped for a moment, and the crowd, seeing this, began to gather about, thinking the run was over.

The horse cleared the crowd for a minute, and then launched out his hind hoofs, and again causing a scattering, ran toward the Waldorf-Astoria, diagonally across the street. A cat coming toward him caused him to run to the sidewalk in front of 11 West Thirty-fourth Street, where another man tried to catch the rope about his neck. Again the bronco threw out his hoofs, this time completely demolishing the plate-glass window in the real estate office of W. J. Roome. He then backed into a small recess leading to the real estate office, and the crowd gave a cheer, thinking him caught. But with a bound the animal was out and continuing toward the Waldorf.

At the corner of Astor Court and Thirty-fourth Street is an entrance to the hotel, guarded by a revolving door. Into this the horse pushed his way, the attendant therein within the hotel at the bronco's approach. The door revolved, catching the animal's head and forelegs and holding him fast. But, seeing that there was no chance of going in further, he backed, and turned in the direction of the City Club, at 10 West Thirty-first Street, where many members were watching his wild run.

Just to the east of the clubhouse is an alley leading to a stable in the rear. Seeing this avenue of escape, the horse made for it. As soon as he had entered the gate of the alley was closed and the animal trapped.

Shortly afterward the four men who had started in pursuit, and had followed the horse on electric cars, jumped from a Thirty-fourth Street car, and, procuring ropes, made a lasso and caught the horse. When he was brought out he was still steaming, his body being about his neck. He seemed glad to be in the hands of those who would take him back to his stall.

Bridal Couple in a Runaway.

BAY SHORE, L. I., March 15.—Mr. and Mrs. Edward Peckman Underhill of New York, who are spending their honeymoon here, were in a runaway accident here this afternoon which came near to resulting seriously to the bride. Mrs. Underhill sustained a severe second fall owing to the roadway, and in order to restrain her from falling her husband had to cease all efforts to control the horse. The affair occurred on the South Road, which was crowded with driving parties at the time. An overturning of the trap seemed likely to occur at any moment. H. T. Peters of Islip, who was on horseback, stopped the animal.

Arm Broken in Riverside Runaway.

A buggy in which was seated Charles Whitmay, of 451 West Fiftieth Street, came into collision yesterday with the carriage of Edward Baufield, of 116 East Seventy-fifth Street, as the two were on Riverside Drive at One Hundred and Fifteenth Street. When the two vehicles struck Mr. Whitmay was thrown out and received a broken left arm. Mr. Baufield's carriage was damaged, but he walked along. Whitmay was cared for by an ambulance surgeon, and the two went home.

HILL TO INVADE CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 15.—James J. Hill, President of the Northern Securities Company, is said to be planning to invade California by way of the north with lines of the Great Northern Railway. It is stated that two surveys have been made along the California and Oregon coast, between Portland and San Francisco, and that two routes already have been submitted to Mr. Hill.

One surveying party worked northward from Marin County and the other southward from Portland, Ore. Both routes are shorter than the Shasta route of the Southern Pacific, one by 120 miles and the other by at least 140 miles. It is asserted that the routes selected by the Hill surveyors guarantee a grade of about two per cent. as against four per cent. and more along the Southern Pacific line.

The further information has been obtained that in routing the new line the surveyors were instructed to touch Coos, Ore., or some other city on Coos Bay, and also Crescent City and Eureka, in California, but it is possible that the two latter points may now be ignored, for since the surveyors completed their work the Santa Fé has suddenly acquired the roads around Crescent City and Eureka, and announced its intention of extending the small properties southward to San Francisco.

Among those familiar with President Hill's purpose it is the belief that the Santa Fé's determination to get a foothold along the California coast was prompted, and greatly hastened by an intimation that President Hill was preparing to cut through the same territory.

As to President Hill's plans for a terminal on San Francisco Bay, it is asserted that he has already secured an option on property on the north side water front, where a new boat train easily connect with the point on the Marin County side.

RESEMBLES LAWSON BOAT

Some of New Cup Yacht's Lines Suggest Independence.

Her Sail Area Probably Will Not Greatly Exceed That of Constitution—Yachting News.

Special to The New York Times.

BRISTOL, R. I., March 15.—As the new cup yacht's general characteristics become more apparent with the rapid progress which is being made in the construction of the new boat, those who have seen her remark many similarities in design to the Independence. The new Herreshoff creation cannot be called an Independence, as far as the whole shape is concerned, but there are elements in her hull strikingly similar to the Crowninshield design and of a character to stamp the craft as one in which the designer showed a departure to a degree from the basis upon which the Columbia and the Constitution's models were evolved. The new Herreshoff boat is not of the scow type, because she is not equipped with the hard, shallow bilges and extremely flat floor of great length. Her length of floor and curve to the bilges are not carried out beyond the ends of the water line, as they were in the Independence. But there is one characteristic about the boat savoring strongly of the Boston boat of 1901, and that is the size of the ship above the water line. It is true that she is lank and lean underneath, with the most graceful curves imaginable, but up above she is a remarkably big boat. The Independence was considered to have an abnormal area of deck, yet the latest Herreshoff creation exceeds it by a great many square feet.

The increased length over all of the new Bristol yacht, as compared with the other craft that were in the racing in 1901, is a feature of the design that is being much talked about in yachting circles, for it is well remembered how the long forward overhang of the Independence pounded and slapped the water in the least jump of a sea when the ninety-foot class were on the course with tacks aboard. The Independence had a flat spot of good area away out under her forward overhang, which proved a drag to her on more than one occasion off Newport in the Summer of 1901.

It is not so in the model of the new boat. Her forward overhang, though a length that almost gives a shock to yachting men viewing it, is not of the flat type. Instead the lines are carried out almost to the stem in a U shape, at once precluding the possibility of any serious pounding in a chop of sea, to retard or check, by offering a flat surface to the roll of the swells.

Columbia measured 132 feet over all, and Constitution was some six inches longer, while Independence had a length of 140 feet 10½ inches. The new boat in the Herreshoff shops is more than 145 feet long.

The beam as well as the over-all length Nat Herreshoff has worked out surprises, giving the new yacht greater beam than any other racer of the keel type received before in the ninety-foot class. The latest Herreshoff craft has a beam of 23 feet 4 or 5 inches, almost 26 feet. The Columbia's beam was 24 feet 6 inches, and the Independence had a beam of 23 feet 11¼ inches. The Constitution's beam is 23 feet 2½ inches. The draughts of the big racing boats are as follows: Columbia, 20 feet 3 inches; Constitution, 19 feet 10½ inches; the new boat, 19 feet, and Independence, 20 feet. The freeboards of all the craft enumerated above were nearly of the same extent—9 feet 4 inches. The Constitution was a very dry boat in a seaway; she threw only a small quantity of water on the decks in ordinary weather conditions, and in a stiff breeze, with a weather-beam sheeting, was a comfortable craft; yet there were naval architects who have expressed themselves to the effect that if the freeboard of the craft was about three inches lower than it is the windage would be less. The Bristol designer has gone to a lower freeboard in the new yacht, and that in that respect she will when afloat appear little different from the Columbia.

Judging from the layout of spar and the base of the triangle the new yacht is to have an increase of sail over the Constitution, but conservative yachtsmen incline to the view that the new craft will carry no more than 1,000 square feet greater than that of the Constitution. The area of the older boat in canvas was 14,400 square feet.

The annual report of the Directors of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club shows that fifty-two new members were enrolled last year, making the total membership 300.

In regard to the building of the new clubhouse, the Directors have deemed it advisable, owing to the existing labor troubles and to the fear that the work could not be completed before the opening of the club for the coming season, to defer the work until the Fall of 1903. The plans for the new house, as adopted by the Building Committee, have been accepted by the board, and as soon as the coming season ends and the club goes out of commission for the year 1903, work will be started at once upon the new clubhouse. A colored perspective of the proposed new house will shortly be completed and will be placed in the clubhouse along with a complete set of plans.

Commodore Frederick G. Bourne of the New York Yacht Club will be the guest of the Indian Harbor Yac

ON THE TREATY IS TO BEGIN TO-DAY

Senate to Consider Amendments to Panama Convention.

Expected That Proposed Changes Will Be Defeated and That the Treaty Will Be Ratified as Negotiated.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 15.—General debate was closed yesterday in the Senate on the canal treaty. The real consideration of the treaty will be entered upon to-morrow, when the amendments will be taken up and voted on. It is expected that all the amendments will be disposed of to-morrow, and that the final vote will be taken early Tuesday.

The Democratic Senators will hold a conference to-morrow morning to consider and decide, if that is possible, upon a course of action with regard to the amendments pending and to be proposed. It is understood an effort will be made to adopt the unit rule so that the entire body of Democratic Senators shall be lined up in the Senate on the various amendments in accordance with the judgment of a majority of the conferees.

It is regarded as very doubtful that such a rule will be adopted. Many of the Democratic Senators are opposed to doing anything that would place them in the attitude of treating the canal as a partisan question. In this they are in agreement with the Republican Senators. It is probable some of the amendments would prevail through support by Republicans if the measure was being considered as an original proposition, and not as an instrument negotiated by the executive heads of the United States and Colombia, and not subject to amendment without seriously delaying the great project involved—a delay that might prove fatal to its success.

The Republicans explain that in standing together for ratification of the treaty as negotiated they are not actuated by partisan feeling, but by a belief that the amendments proposed are relatively unimportant, and that any amendment would jeopardize the treaty and indefinitely postpone the construction of an Isthmian canal. A number of Republican Senators admit that the treaty might be strengthened in the interest of the United States by amending those clauses relating to the acquisition of territory and the exercise of sovereignty, but they do not share the apprehension of Senator Morgan on that point, being satisfied that the interests of the United States are safeguarded. The same can be said of a number of Democratic Senators who will vote for such amendments in order to satisfy their party associates, and then on the final vote declare themselves for ratification.

While it is likely the effort to get a unit rule will fail in the Democratic conference, its adoption would not accomplish the object in view unless a considerable number of the Republicans should support the amendments, as all interesting motions are decided by a majority vote. It is therefore reasonably certain that all amendments will be rejected. It is not proposed by those who are seeking to amend that unless the amendments are adopted they shall vote against ratification, and there is no reason for the belief that the amendments are not offered in perfect good faith.

Sixty votes are required to ratify, that number being two-thirds of the entire membership. It is considered doubtful if seven votes will be recorded in the negative, and Senator Cullom thinks ratification will be given with approximate unanimity.

With the canal treaty disposed of Tuesday, the Cuban treaty will remain to occupy the Senate. The agreement to so amend the treaty as to provide for legislation by Congress to make it operative removes all obstruction to speedy action, and the understanding is that the Senate will quickly take the Cuban treaty and adjourn finally before the close of this week, unless the President has other business to prolong the session.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN'S RETURN.

Berlin Paper Which Attacked Britain During the Boer War Now Praises the Colonial Secretary.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES
Special Cablegram.

LONDON, March 16.—Mr. Chamberlain's return and the significance of his mission to South Africa, says the Berlin correspondent of The Times, impress alike the friends and foes of England in Germany.

The popular Berlin journal, the Lokal Anzeiger, which, during the Boer war, was extremely hostile to Great Britain, pays an unreserved tribute to the services rendered by Mr. Chamberlain to the British Empire. It says:

"The influence he exercises in the councils of the nation represents a turning point in England's history. There is good reason for awaiting with keen interest the developments of the future as they may affect him and his great aims."

The Berliner Neueste Nachrichten, in speaking of Mr. Chamberlain, says:

"This personification of the policy of force, relentless, unscrupulous, resolute, fearless, harmonizes with the instincts of the English people as long as his policy is on a grand scale."

HE PITIES THE SULTAN.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES
Special Cablegram.

LONDON, March 16.—A representative of The Matin, says the Paris correspondent of The Times, has interviewed M. Militchevitch, the Servian Minister in London, who said that since the publication of the Austro-Russian reform scheme the Bulgarian committees in Macedonia had been helped by other Christians who had previously held aloof.

The Minister said that women were now active agents, even bearing arms. Commandas had also helped in carrying ammunition from the frontier of the interior.

M. Militchevitch declared that he pitied the Sultan, who was the cleverest and most capable man in Turkey. He (the Minister) had seen his Majesty several times in Constantinople, and had found him as anxious for conciliation as anyone.

Speaking of General Hilmi, the Minister declared, was able and honest, and the country was full of good will, but the Turks could not succeed, though everything possible under the circumstances would be done under the Austro-Russian scheme.

SPECTACULAR RIVER FIRE.

Passaic Lighted for Miles by Flames Following Explosion in Arlington Factory — Damage, $75,000.

NEWARK, N. J., March 15.—An explosion, followed by a fire which lighted up both banks of the Passaic for miles and did damage amounting to $75,000, occurred this evening at the works of the Arlington Manufacturing Company on Forest Street, Arlington.

The explosion occurred in "Vault 6," a brick building about 20 by 30 feet, and one story high. When it blew up it contained 41,000 pounds of "seasoning," a highly inflammable and explosive material used in the manufacture of a composition resembling celluloid. There was no one in the vault at the time, and the ignition of the stuff is attributed to spontaneous combustion.

The explosion shattered glass in every direction for a distance of a quarter of a mile. No person was hurt. Several men were at work in other parts of the plant, and one or two of them were stunned and all shaken up. The burning "seasoning" sent out a fierce hot flame. From the vault the fire leaped across the street to the works of the Kempshall Manufacturing Company, makers of golf balls. It also spread to the works of the Flint Kops Roofing Company. These two establishments were badly damaged.

The fire called out the entire fire departments of Arlington, Kearny, and Harrison, on the east bank of the river, and for a time it looked as if help would have to be summoned from this city, but the flames were gotten under control as soon as the great heat from the stuff in the vault subsided, owing to the burning out of the material.

The fire attracted thousands from this city and from the towns across the river, owing to its brightness. The trolley cars were so crowded leaving this city that the recently enforced rule that no one should ride on the bumpers was laughed at.

MASKED MEN LOOT A HOUSE.

Take $8,200 in Cash and Securities from an Ohio Woman's Home—Bind and Blindfold the Inhabitants.

Special to The New York Times.

WAPAKONETA, Ohio, March 15.—There was a bold robbery last night near Cridersville, six miles north of here. Fourteen masked men entered the house of Mrs. Jacob Reischelderfer, an aged and wealthy widow, and took possession. With Mrs. Reischelderfer, are living her granddaughter Blanche, aged twelve years; George Iames and his wife and their son, Joseph Iames, a young man. Mrs. Reischelderfer was known to be afraid to trust her money to the banks.

The robbers first knocked down the elder Iames and bound him and the two women hand and foot with ropes and tied them to bedsteads in separate rooms. When Joseph Iames returned from town the robbers seized and bound him in the kitchen. At the point of a shotgun they made the little girl tell where the money was to be found. They secured $1,200 in cash and $7,000 worth of notes and securities from an old chest, and then proceeded to ransack the house. They took possession of all the jewelry and silverware and secured a month's wages from the elder Iames's pocket. They blindfolded all but the little girl.

After dividing the money some of the robbers left the house at midnight and the others staid until 2 o'clock, helping themselves to wine and eatables. They called all their victims by their first names, and appeared to be familiar with the house. They are supposed to have come from Cridersville or its vicinity.

PUNISHED BY WHITE CAPS.

Special to The New York Times.

TOLEDO, Ohio, March 15.—A band of White Caps, composed of 200 of the better class of young farmers, has undertaken the moral regeneration of Northwestern Ohio. The organization is divided into three or four sections and apparently has the quiet sanction of the authorities.

Since its organization a few weeks ago this band of White Caps has flogged or tarred and feathered four men and posted warnings to many more. Near Trowbridge, in Wood County, lived a man who neglected to pay his debts and was in the habit of beating his wife. He was tied to a tree and flogged. A resident of Portage neglected his invalid wife and sick child. He escaped from the White Caps, who were about to tar and feather him. He has not been seen since. A citizen of Rollersville was whipped and flogged for getting drunk, chasing his wife from home at night, and threatening to cut her throat.

In Lucas County a man was both flogged and tarred for drunkenness and child beating.

SENSATION IN TROLLEY CAR.

A small sensation was created in a Fourth Avenue car last evening when William H. Zibbell of 132 East Twenty-sixth Street, found that he had been robbed of his pocketbook, and as a result Mamie Williams, address unknown, is under arrest at the West Thirtieth Street Station. When the conductor, at Thirty-second Street, commenced to collect fares, there were a number of men and one woman standing in the car. Zibbell took his wallet from his back pocket and paid his fare with a bill, and replaced the wallet in the same pocket.

A few streets further on he suddenly missed it and went to the conductor and reported. The conductor said he had seen the woman placing something very hurriedly in her breast. Immediately Zibbell became excited and cried out that she was standing near him, and he insisted on her arrest. The car was stopped and Policeman Randolph Bose of the Tenderloin Station was asked to make the arrest. He did so, and the woman was taken to the station and examined. She protested her innocence, but it was thought necessary to search her. This was done, and only a dollar bill and 70 cents in change was found on her. She gave her name, but would not give her address or any other information. She was locked up.

BOY'S LEG CAUGHT IN A WHEEL.

Amputation Performed in a Drug Store by Two Physicians Who Happened to be Near.

While a surrey was going along Seventh Avenue, at One Hundred and Sixteenth Street, yesterday afternoon Julius Werner, eight years of age, of 141 West One Hundred and Eleventh Street grabbed the rear spring and jumped up to have a ride. His left leg got caught in the spokes of a hind wheel and it was crushed above the knee. He was carried into a drug store, where two physicians amputated the leg to save the boy's life.

In the surrey were George Bultman of 8 East Seventy-second Street, said to be the son of the late Alfred N. Bultman, and James Armstrong of 301 East Seventy-eighth Street. The latter was arrested. He did not see the boy jump up behind, and when the boy fell to the roadway and women and children screamed he pulled up the horse.

The physicians who amputated the boy's leg were on the way to see patients, and they had their instruments. The doors of the drug store were locked and the operation was performed before the arrival of an ambulance from the J. Hood Wright Hospital.

Mr. Bultman said that Mr. Armstrong could not help the accident, as the boy "hitched on" behind. He secured the services of Justice Mayer of the Court of Special Sessions, and gave bail for his driver in the sum of $3,000, offering his property at 9 East Seventy-second Street as surety.

BOY KILLED BY A CAR.

Adam Schwenk, twelve years of age, of 3,200 Third Avenue, had his left arm and left leg cut off by a north-bound car in Boston Road, near One Hundred and Sixty-eighth Street, last evening. He was stealing a ride on a south-bound car, and when the conductor discovered him he jumped off and fell in front of the north-bound car.

Motorman Thomas Moran of 4,200 Third Avenue, jammed his brake down hard, and the conductor threw the trolley pole from the overhead wire, but the boy was carried for several feet in front of the car before it came to a standstill. The motorman was arrested.

The accident happened almost in front of Dr. Eugene Monahan's house. The physician ran out and carried the boy to a drug store at Jackson Avenue and the Boston Road, but the druggist, it was said, refused to allow the physician to care for the boy in the store. Then Dr. Monahan carried the boy to his office. Some Afterward the boy was taken to Lebanon Hospital, where he died.

VISIT OF KING LEOPOLD

He Will Come to America Next Year If Possible.

Pan-Germans Losing Ground in Belgium —Gen. Brialmont Upholds the Malthusian Theory of War.

Foreign Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BRUSSELS, March 6.—King Leopold, it is authoritatively stated, has postponed his visit to the United States until next year. He has been prompted in his decision not to leave Europe this year by the number of important questions now before Parliament, and which might necessitate his presence in Brussels at any moment. It is, however, certain that he intends to cross the Atlantic as soon as possible.

The King, who is essentially a modern man, and in manners resembles a typical American business man, makes no secret of his admiration for the people and institutions of the United States. He is on terms of close personal friendship with several representative American residents of Paris, whom he constantly visits during his frequent sojourns in the French capital.

King Leopold has followed the course of recent events in Venezuela with the keenest interest. A coolness has long existed between the Belgian sovereign and the German Emperor, and during the course of the Venezuelan trouble the King never ceased to express his disapproval of German methods in South America. The truth is that Leopold is a liberal in the broadest sense of the word, and his ideas of what a modern constitutional monarch should be are somewhat different from William II.'s mediæval conception of kingship by divine right.

Count du Bois's work, "Belges ou Français," has had a repercussion in the Flemish provinces. A certain number of Flemish political leaders have taken the book as a pretext to air their unpatriotic Pan-German sentiments.

"Let France annex the Walloon provinces if she wishes; we are members of the great Germanic family and shall never cease to consider ourselves as such."

This is the resumé of their utterances. As a matter of fact, however, the Pan-Germans are losing ground in Belgium, and a reaction has already set in against their absurd pretensions. This is particularly the case as regards the language question. A superficial examination of the statistics of the rival races, which make up Belgium's population, would tend to show that the two languages—French and Flemish—hold about the same position in the kingdom. According to the last census, the number of inhabitants whose mother tongue was French amounted to 3,280,844, and those who spoke Flemish 3,488,481. But, and here is the great point, whereas the great mass of the French-speaking Walloons are entirely ignorant of Flemish, all the educated people of the Flemish provinces speak French as a matter of course. In Brussels, where the two languages are nominally on an equality, it would be possible to walk the streets of the city for a month without ever hearing a word of Flemish.

The relative position of the two languages is aptly illustrated by the French and Flemish newspapers in Belgium. All the leading sheets in Brussels, such as the Conservative Journal de Bruxelles, the Vingtième Siecle, and the Patriote, the Liberal Etoile Belge, the Indépendance Belge, the Chronique, and Le Soir are published in French. Even in Antwerp the principal organ of the press, La Metropole, is a French publication.

These facts are easily explained. The Belgians are a practical people, and educated Flemings are far-sighted enough to realize that the French language puts them in touch with a nation of 40,000,000 people, whereas Flemish, which is not even understood in Germany, isolates them.

The question of the Antwerp fortifications has once more been brought forward by Gen. Brialmont. He has elaborated a new plan, according to which the existing works are to be completely demolished and replaced by a fortified inclosure to be erected on the site of the nine forts of the present retrenchment camp. The question of the defense of Antwerp in time of war is one of vital importance to Belgium, and has preoccupied military engineers for many years past.

Gen. Brialmont's plan, coming as it does from one of the foremost military engineers of the day, seems to be the most practical and feasible one yet devised, and is supported by the most competent authorities in Belgian army circles. Gen. Brialmont has always been of the opinion that Belgium should be a military power, albeit a second or a third rate one. In this connection he has just published a work in which his previous theories on the subject of war and standing armies are summed up and explained at length.

He believes that the limitation of population by war is a necessity. He is a disciple of Malthus, whose theory, he says, has, since it was first enunciated, been greatly exaggerated. He refers to the laws on the limitation of population which prevailed in ancient Greece, throughout Europe in the Middle Ages, and in India and China to-day. Reference is then made to the laws prohibiting marriages among the paupers which prevailed to a recent date in Bavaria and Switzerland.

After reviewing the various causes which tend to check the normal increase of population, he finally touches upon the great question of war, which he declares is an evil, no doubt, but a necessary evil.

"Man," says the General, "is naturally a fighter, and the instincts of combativity show themselves in him from his earliest years."

This fact, according to Gen. Brialmont, is not to be deplored, for civilization has been the result of wars which have accelerated the march of human progress in every age. No great political or social progress has been effected without the help of war. It is a fallacy, moreover, to suppose that civilization diminishes the chances of war; on the contrary, it may be said that a highly civilized state of society tends toward the increase of armies, says the General in conclusion.

The Vicomte de Spoelberch de Lovenjoul's long-heralded work on George Sand is shortly to be published. It is certain to provoke as much interest as have the Vicomte's previous works on Balzac, George Sand, and Musset.

SENATE DEMOCRATS AND BRYANISM

Choice of Gorman as Leader Signifies No Sudden Revolt.

Sentiment of Democratic Senators Long Has Been Anti-Bryan—Men Once His Stanch Supporters Now Oppose the Nebraskan.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 15.—The selection of Arthur Pue Gorman, immediately on his return to the Senate, as the Democratic leader has been heralded as indicating a change in feeling on the part of Democratic Senators toward Bryan and Bryanism. If it does not indicate that, it is a matter of course manifestation of a sentiment which has long existed.

The Senate Democrats are not Bryan men, and have not been for a long time. The average Democratic Senator wants harmony, and while he is radically opposed to Bryan, he does not think it necessary to chase Bryan's friends out of the party by saying unpleasant things about their leader. Yet when the occasion arises, as when Gorman was chosen for leader, the Democratic Senator does not hesitate to take action which is hightly disagreeable to the Bryanites.

When the Fifty-seventh Congress adjourned there was hardly a Bryan man in the Senate—certainly not a single out-spoken Bryan man. It remains to be seen whether among the new Senators there are any who are irretrievably committed to Bryanism. One or two of them come to Washington with the reputation of being devoted to the Nebraska man, but it has been observed that a very short experience in the Senate is all that is needed to transform a Bryan man into an opponent of Bryanism.

When it is said the Democrats of the Senate have not for a long time had any use for Bryanism it must be remembered that among these Senators are some who were formerly noted as among the most rampant defenders of the Chicago platform of 1896, if not of the Kansas City platform of 1900. Senator Bailey was one of the strongest defenders of free silver a few years ago. Senator Carmack, even after his election to the Senate, was understood to be violent on the subject of Bryanism. Senator Daniel was put forward as the silver candidate for Chairman at the Chicago Convention when Senator Hill was defeated. Senator Dubois came over to the Democratic Party on the free silver issue, as did Senators Patterson and Teller. Senator Money claimed the honor of being the original Bryan boomer.

A year or more ago Mr. Bryan came to Washington, as had been his custom, to instruct the party leaders on his views of public policies. He had often done it before, and had always been listened to with attention. In 1900, when he paid his regular visit to Washington, the Senators of his party deserted the chamber and sauntered out into the marble room, eager to shake him by the hand and assure him of their devotion.

But in 1902, for the first time Mr. Bryan met with a distinct shock. Some of the Democratic leaders in the House received his instructions as of old, and there was little, if any, change there. But when he went over to the Senate he met with an entirely different reception.

The Democratic Senators refused to listen to him. It was not only the men who had supported him simply for the sake of regularity, such as Pettus and Clay, who took this attitude, but even his one-time stalwart supporters, such as Dubois and Carmack. Mr. Bryan went back to Lincoln, and never since then has he held one of his old levees in the marble room.

Almost at that very time leading Senators were conferring with New York Democrats with a view of re-organizing the party, dropping Bryanism and carrying that State. It was in these conferences that the Parker boom originated, in consequence of the impression that Judge Parker would be the Gubernatorial candidate that year. When the Congressional campaign was organized, Senator Carmack secured the selection of James M. Griggs of Georgia as Chairman. This move was rather a surprise to some who had watched the steady repudiation of Bryan by the Senators, for Griggs had the reputation of being a Bryan man.

The selection was made advisedly, however, Griggs conducted the campaign as far as he could on the tariff and trust issues and showed as strong a desire to get away from the issues which had wrecked the party as any Senator could have wished. He went even further than Carmack, for he dropped the Philippine issue as well as the silver issue, much to the Tennessee Senator's surprise and somewhat to his disgust. Bryan was ignored throughout the campaign, and such speeches as he made were delivered, not at the instance of the committee, but at the invitation of private clubs.

It is not too much to say for a year past there has not been a single out-and-out Bryan man in the Senate. Even such men as Senator Tillman, while undoubtedly holding their old opinions, have acquiesced in the elimination of Bryan from Senatorial councils and have made no protest against it. Such men as Bailey, formerly among his strongest supporters, have taken the lead in his elimination. The determined attitude of the Senate Democrats has infected their colleagues in the House to a considerable extent.

The election of Senator Gorman to the leadership, therefore, did not represent any change in sentiment or policy. He would have been the leader a year ago, if he had been in the Senate. What it did represent was a desire on the part of the Democrats to secure a capable commander. Senator Jones of Arkansas had been nominally the leader, but for a year or more his leadership had been nominal. The Democrats in the Senate were really directed by a sort of syndicate leadership among the members of which were Cockrell, Bailey and Dubois. But the want of a capable leader was keenly felt. As the time drew near for Mr. Gorman to take his seat, it became certain that he would be the actual leader, even if he were not elected to that position. He is the leader, and the Democrats are doing the best they can to become an organized and united body under him.

STRUCK AN OILY SPRING.

Flow of Water Into a Trench in the Bronx Cannot Be Stopped—Its Source Unknown.

While digging a deep trench in front of Hupfel's brewery in St. Ann's Avenue, near One Hundred and Sixty-first Street, Saturday afternoon, workmen discovered a spring of dark oily water flowing out of a crevice in a rock. It has resisted the efforts of the laborers to stop the flow. At a late hour last night it was flowing with unabated force at the rate of a couple of thousands gallons an hour.

There is a constant bubbling in the basin which the spring has hollowed out in the rock, and every few seconds a gassy bubble rises to the surface and breaks, spreading the oil over the water.

The heavy rains of last week caused water to accumulate in the cellar of the brewery office to such an extent that it was decided to extend a drain from the cellar to the sewer, a distance of about twenty-five feet. Work was begun Saturday morning and before they had dug more than a couple of feet the workmen found the ground saturated with water. The belief was that a break had occurred in one of the water pipes accounting for the accumulation of water in the cellar. The pipes were reached, but all were found intact.

The flow of water continued and it was not until solid rock was struck at a depth of about six feet that the source was discovered. To prevent the water from undermining the sidewalk and street, a twenty-foot length of steel pipe has been used to drain the flow into the sewer. The attention of the Department of Sewers has been called to the matter, and a thorough investigation is to be made to-day.

Preparedness

THIS is a wonderful word. Splendid when applied to the horse that has been trained right up to the pink of perfection and stands ready for a great race. Superb when applied to a vast army equipped with most perfect weapons and ready for offence or defence at the moment of the bugle's call.

But how infinitely greater is its value to the everyday needs of a great nation at peace with all the world, when it applies fully, completely, exhaustively to a Great Modern Store that stands ready to serve the public with the thousands upon thousands of things that the public needs.

Back of Preparedness are months of Preparation; months when the world's most skilful experts have girdled the globe, and spent days and weeks in planning, searching, examining, choosing and buying merchandise of every conceivable character for personal wear of man, woman and child; and the furnishing and beautifying of the home.

When you remember that in one style of shoes there may be eight or ten sizes, and a half-dozen widths to each size, and thirty or more models at a single price—when you realize that in one single line of silks at one price, there are often over a hundred colorings; and then to comprehend the almost infinite number of diverse general lines of goods gathered here, even before the analysis of varieties begins, you may catch some hint of the labor of preparation for a new season in a great Modern Store.

And when you remember that a single width lacking in any size of any shoe—a single shade lacking in any color of any line of silk or dress goods or ribbon, or gloves, would make this an incomplete and unprepared store—then you may in a measure appreciate the immensity of that marvelous word that tells the condition of WANAMAKER'S on this Monday in the middle of March when the world is preparing for the new season now almost here—

Two Hundred Thousand Yards of Fancy Mädras at 10c

32 Inches Wide and Worth a Half More

THESE are all in this year's new patterns—an assortment of about four hundred different designs—identical with goods selling everywhere at 15c a yard.

The explanation of such a bargain coming now is simple enough. The mill's season is over, and the surplus goods are in one to four pieces of a pattern, impossible for jobbers to handle. Quick selling demanded a great store that could show them directly to the public; and that meant WANAMAKER'S.

More than three quarters of the entire lot are in the favored blue and white grounds, with plain stripes and figured effects of the most beautiful designs of the season. There is a sprinkling of the new grays, or gun-metal effects; also quite a quantity in the plain, solid colors.

It is a superb variety of the best fifteen-cent madras on the market, to-day at 10c a yard!

MISS CLARA BARTON IN RED CROSS WORK

Statement of the ex-General Secretary in Her Defense.

HISTORY OF THE MOVEMENT

Walter P. Phillips Says That President Roosevelt Must Have Been Misinformed — The Memorial to Congress.

"The recent action of President Roosevelt in refusing to serve on the Board of Consultation of the American National Red Cross, and declining to permit the members of his Cabinet to serve, and the letter written to Miss Clara Barton by Secretary Cortelyou, have drawn from Walter P. Phillips of Bridgeport, Conn., who had been associated with Miss Barton in the Red Cross work, a statement in her defense. The statement, which is very long, gives something of the history of the Red Cross movement in this country and Miss Barton's part in the work, and declares that the President's action was based on a misapprehension of the facts, due to representations made by a minority of the members of the Red Cross—the newer members, and for the most part residents of Washington.

"Some twenty-five years ago," Mr. Phillips says, "when the writer was at the head of The Associated Press in Washington, a lady unknown to him at that time asked, through a mutual friend, for an audience. Miss Barton came to my office and briefly told me the story of the Red Cross from its inception in Geneva down to that time. Lived then every important nation on the face of the earth had given its assent and become a party to the Geneva treaty, with the solitary exception of the United States. The matter had been repeatedly presented to our Government, but it had been buried by Secretary Seward, and his successors in the State Department were reluctant to recommend anything that had been considered and rejected by that alert and able statesman. The latest attempt to secure the adherence of the United States had been made by the Rev. Henry W. Bellows, who had finally given up the contest against precedent and prejudice and had written to Miss Barton that while he wished her success in the field in which he had been defeated, he saw no hope in the situation for her or anybody else.

"Miss Barton, whose services in the Northern armies during the civil conflict are matters of such recent history that I need not dwell upon them, had gone to Europe in 1869 for a much needed rest. With the breaking out of the war between Germany and France she was urged to attach herself to the army of the Grand Duke of Baden, and did finally, supplied her services in that terrible conflict wereupon that she was decorated by the old Emperor William with the order of the Iron Cross.

"In this war Miss Barton gained a direct and comprehensive knowledge of the operations of the Red Cross. She had her own eyes what could be accomplished by an organized force on the battlefield, in the hospital, and in the camp. Her opportunities were unrivaled for contrasting the methods of the Red Cross societies with the imperfect work, great as it was, accomplished by the Sanitary and Christian Commissions during the civil war. She returned to America in due course, determined to secure the adoption of the Red Cross treaty by the United States.

"This was the situation when she came to me and told me what had been done by others, and particularly by Dr. Bellows, and how every endeavor, no matter how well directed or how assiduously sustained, had ended in absolute and unequivocal failure, and invited my co-operation. To me the outlook was distinctly dismal, and I told her so, but she had much more to say, and she so completely overcame me that she gradually communicated her enthusiasm to me, as she did in many others.

RED CROSS TREATY.

"Just before President Garfield was shot, in 1881, Mr. Blaine, then his Secretary of State, told Miss Barton, as the outcome of many exhaustive discussions between them, she might believe in the Geneva treaty sufficiently to urge President Garfield to recommend its adoption by the United States in his forthcoming message to Congress. Thus the matter rested when President Garfield died and Gen. Arthur succeeded him. Mr. Blaine quickly resigned and Mr. Frelinghuysen became the Secretary of State. President Arthur told Miss Barton that anything she felt moderately sure his predecessor would have done, if spared, he would do, and he kept his promise. In his first message he devoted a paragraph to the Geneva treaty, urging its ratification by the Senate. The action resulted in such ratification by the Senate on March 1, 1882.

"Up to this time Miss Barton had paid for clerk hire, stationery, printing, postage, conveyance, rent, fuel, and light out of her own purse, and has continued to do so during the time she spent in Washington on her Red Cross mission in 1876 through all the speeding years. Many subscriptions, and generous ones, too, have been made to the American Association of the Red Cross for the purpose of relieving specific distresses, at Johnstown, in the flooded valleys of the Mississippi, in Cuba during the war with Spain, at Galveston, and elsewhere, but that money has been spent for relief purposes, pure and simple. The expense of maintaining the organization from the beginning to the present time has been paid almost entirely out of the private means of its President.

"The prevailing opinion is that the Red Cross is supported by the Government, and that it has no need for money for the extension of its organization and the expansion of its usefulness. The fact is that the Red Cross the world over is supported by the people, and its office is to serve the Government in times of war by caring for those who fall in battle or are overtaken by disease on the field. The American people have contributed liberally after the manner of the dwellers in other countries in times of calamity or great national distress.

"But all of the contributions referred to are spent for relief, and the very life—continued existence of the Red Cross, an institution at once grand and effective—has been dependent upon the moderate income of one hundred dollars a year, written to me in September, 1900, by Mrs. Ellen Mussey, then the Vice President and counsel of the Red Cross, gives a detailed account of the cash that Miss Barton contributed to the Red Cross during the preceding quarter of a century. And it amounted to a sum which would, with good interest reach fully a quarter of a million dollars. If we add to this the present compensation of $8,000 per annum during the years Miss Barton has devoted her life and strength to Red Cross work and the amounts during which time she has not received, or desired to receive a single penny for her services, it will be readily seen that she has made an investment in principal and interest for the benefit of her countrymen to the amount of a million dollars in all. No man competent to fill her position, even inadequately, could undertake her duties on a salary of $10,000 per annum, and I know of many whose duties are less onerous than hers have been who are paid $25,000 per annum and upward.

"Mr. Phillips refers to the Galveston disaster, Miss Barton's work there, and the resolutions passed by the Central Relief Committee in recognition of that work.

"It has continued to be asserted," Mr. Phillips continues, "that Miss Barton is by her decadence, whereas the truth is that she is stronger, abler, clearer, and more far-sighted, more economical of her strength and better fitted to make a fight against disease than any woman twenty-five years her junior. Whenever the proper person, man or woman, or an aggregation of them in the shape of a committee, comes forward with the ability to take up the work and preserve the autonomy of what she has brought forth, she will retire gracefully and with a grateful heart. She feels that she owes it to the people, to the Government, to the numberless dear friends she has in other lands, and, above all, to herself, to conserve what she has brought into being, and to take no step that does not contemplate the safety and further development of her beneficent undertaking. She has been her own critic from the very early as 1882, and she has been the author of the annual reports of the members of the Red Cross, held at the Arlington Hotel, in Washington, on June 10, 1900."

At that meeting Miss Barton, speaking of her long service, said:

"Added to the long service, with a consciousness of many mistakes, with no opportunity to make, but have been on the ground for fifteen years; every one carried through—its work finished, its condition restored, its lives saved, prompt assistance to every contributor rendered, its annals of work closed, its affairs settled, reports made, if there is any one left to make it with."

She said:

"And now I ask of the By Laws; that you take up my burden and allow me the few days—nay, years, if that may be—that fall to me. In your many hands the burden will be light that has been heavy on mine. With your united wisdom, it will reach the height it should reach. With a heart full of tenderness for you all, I beg you to grant my request, and when this meeting is closed to go with me to my plain, country home, break bread with me at my own table, and let this be the happiest Red Cross day in all the twenty years. Will some one move the acceptance of this proposition?"

At the annual meeting on Dec. 10 and 11, 1901, Miss Barton, repeated her desire to be released.

"There is no change in her position now," Mr. Phillips says, "as is shown from a page of her letter written to President Roosevelt, which was eliminated at the earnest solicitation of her friends."

In the eliminated page Miss Barton says that after the President's action she must leave the country, and adds: "My retirement shall be absolute, out of the influence of all, and I will live out in another country the good faith I have always sought to cherish in my own."

Mr. Phillips proceeds as follows:

"In spite of many ambitious plans to advance individual interests, the person with the required ability and the money necessary to carry on Miss Barton's work has not been found. For more than twenty years I was an active member of the American Red Cross and am familiar with its history, its achievements, and its vicissitudes, from its inception to the present time, and know whereof I speak. The search for her successor has thus far been a vain one, earnestly as Miss Barton and the real friends of the cause have sought for a fitting hand that was willing to assume the arduous duty of guiding the work of the American Red Cross.

"The letter that the President caused Mr. Cortelyou to write to Miss Barton has wounded her. She and her friends are at loss to understand how he could have been led to do this when even a cursory glance at the broad subject would have convinced him that the matter admitted of no controversy whatsoever. To those familiar with Red Cross history it is most obvious that some one was laboring under a gross misconception of Red Cross affairs when the President was informed concerning them, and, believing in his courage and high sense of honor, the friends of the Red Cross and of Miss Barton feel assured that he will amend his action as soon as the real issues in the case are brought to his notice.

"Referring to the memorial to Congress, on the contents of which President Roosevelt based his refusal to serve on the Board of Consultation of the Red Cross or to allow the members of his Cabinet to serve, it will be seen that he was misinformed as to what was done and the manner in which it was done at the Red Cross annual meeting on Dec. 9, 1902. It is greatly to be regretted that such action should have been taken by the President without giving a hearing to the majority of the organization or to Miss Barton herself. There is nothing new or strange in the fact that there should be differences of opinion as to the management of such an organization—very few escape internal conflicts—but it is generally understood that the majority of the members are entitled to control or at least to consideration.

"It is especially significant that the minority should have been heard without notice to the majority, and that it should have proceeded immediately to put the correspondence, without even waiting for the formal reply from Miss Barton, in the form of a memorial to Congress, to be printed as an executive document, and thereby made subject to widespread distribution, under the official frank and apparent authority of Congress, and that its distribution should have been so widely made, both in the United States and abroad, reflecting most unjustly upon the fair name of the organization and its President.

ACTION ON MEMORIAL.

"Regarding the claim that changes were made, in several instances, by a sort of trap laid by Francis Atwater, there is absolutely nothing in that. There was nothing irregular in the request made by him for proxies. He was entirely within his rights. Not one-half of the proxies were returned to his hands or subject to his discretion, but the signers sent them to several of the persons who were present, to use in accordance with their judgment. While there were seven States represented by members actually present, the entire list of signers to the memorial, with one exception, are residents of Washington, D. C. In every act of record, including all to which exceptions are taken, there was a clear majority of those actually present recorded in the affirmative.

"The motion to postpone action upon the by-laws one year, as made by the Hon. John W. Foster, was only voted upon by those present, without the use of proxies, and was defeated by a vote of seventeen to sixteen. There were some present who realized that delay was equivalent to the death of the organization and voted accordingly. The by-laws were not adopted, as stated in the memorial, by a vote of eighty-nine to thirteen, of which seventy-two were proxies. A clear majority of those present voted affirmatively by roll call.

"It is true that the by-laws as adopted were not submitted to the members of the Executive Committee, nor was there any necessity that they should be prior to the meeting. At the time of sending out proxies and the request made for their signing but slight changes had been suggested, and the Hon. Richard Olney, counselor of the Red Cross, had been advised of those. Other and more radical changes were suggested afterward. They were not considered by a self-constituted committee, but by perhaps a dozen different members, who had the right to consider them. No one of them is responsible for the changes, but it was generally determined that they should be presented for adoption as they were finally read in the meeting.

"In providing that the officers shall be elected annually, except the President, who may be elected for life, it was clearly the thought to recognize Miss Barton as all the world has recognized her, as peculiarly the embodiment of the Red Cross ideas and principles, and whose life work fairly entitles her to such recognition. Indeed, upon the resolution presented by Dr. A. Monae Lesser, as follows, the vote recorded included every one present in the affirmative with three exceptions:

"Whereas, The members of the American National Red Cross are cognisant of the past unceasing and efficient labors of their President, Miss Clara Barton, and whereas they desire to express their appreciation and confidence in her as the President, be it resolved that Miss Clara Barton shall be the President of the American National Red Cross during her natural life, hoping that God may grant that she may be spared to hold this post for many years hence.

"To show the claims to priority of those present on the floor and voting, the following list is significant:

Dr. Julian B. Hubbell.—Present on every field excepting Galveston.

Mrs. Enola L. Gardiner.—Mississippi River.

Dr. Joseph Gardiner.—Johnstown, Port Royal hurricane, Cuba.

Dr. Monae Lesser.—Havana and Santiago.

Mrs. Harriet L. Reed.—Johnstown, Port Royal.

Major James A. McDowell.—Johnstown, Cuba, and Galveston.

Gen. William H. Sears.—Galveston.

Mrs. Fannie B. Ward.—Cuba and Galveston.

"During the period of its existence there have been the following occasions in which the agencies of the Red Cross have been invoked—calamitous disasters too far-reaching in their effect for local relief:

"Michigan forest fires, 1881; Mississippi floods, 1882; Mississippi floods, 1884; Ballast Flats, 1885; Texas famine, 1885; Charleston earthquake, 1886; Mount Vernon (Ill.) cyclone, 1888; Florida yellow fever, 1888; Johnstown disaster, 1889; Russian famine, 1891-2; Pomeroy (Iowa) cyclone, 1893; South Carolina islands tidal wave, 1893-4; Armenian massacres, 1896; Cuban reconcentrados, 1896; Spanish-American war, 1898; Galveston disaster, 1900.

"Contributions in money and supplies have been received for the relief of sufferers by these calamities, as shown by the several reports, of more than $1,000,000, and although the exigencies of the situation rendered the work of distribution one of great difficulty it has been done so widely, prudently, and effectively as not only to accomplish its purpose, but to excite the admiration of all who were personally conversant with it.

"As already noted, the signers of the memorial to Congress are, with one exception, citizens of the District of Columbia, and most of them are new members, the most persistent agitator—Miss Mabel T. Boardman—having been swept into membership on the flood tide that brought us the new act of incorporation in 1900. Among the suggestions made by Miss Boardman, in a letter written to Mrs. John A. Logan, Vice President of the Red Cross, is one providing that Miss Barton be relegated to the rear—made Honorary President—and an annuity arranged for her by Miss Boardman's father and others, amounting to $2,500 per annum. If anything were needed to show that Miss Boardman is a very new element in the Red Cross, her proposition to pension Miss Barton would be quite sufficient."

Mr. Phillips concludes as follows:

"A year ago, after having served the Red Cross as its General Secretary for more than twenty years, I declined a re-election, but I cannot let this occasion pass without raising my voice in protest, for I owe it to myself to defend a woman who is being unjustly assailed, and I have spoken because I owe it also to the rapidly disappearing fragments of the Federal armies, which, once every year, march again to martial music under the banner of the Grand Army of the Republic, and to the memory of those warriors of both blue and gray who, transfixed themselves upon the firing line when the bugle's blast was heard by Southern ford and glen, fell and now sleep beneath the unremembering grass, the deep slumber from which there is no material awakening."

GIFT TO LONG ISLAND COLLEGE HOSPITAL

J. Rogers Maxwell Offers to Build Memorial Structure.

He Will Put Up the Two Central Sections of a New Building—One Wing a Skene Memorial—Public Appeal for the Other.

It has been announced that Long Island College Hospital is to have a new structure, replacing the present building occupied by it. This will be done through the generosity of J. Rogers Maxwell, who has offered to build at his own expense the two central sections of the proposed structure as a memorial to his brother, Henry W. Maxwell, who for many years was a member of the Board of Regents of the hospital, and who, at the time of his death, was engaged on a plan for its reconstruction.

Mr. Maxwell's offer was set forth in a letter to the Board of Regents, in which he says:

"It is my desire to erect a memorial to my late brother, Henry W. Maxwell, and it is fitting that this memorial should be a fulfillment of his desire to obtain new buildings and an equipment for the Long Island College Hospital.

"I therefore offer to the Board of Regents to construct and equip the two central buildings shown on the accompanying perspective drawing and plans, upon the premises now owned by the institution. Upon acceptance of this offer, I shall make all necessary contracts in my own name, and when completed I shall deliver into your possession these buildings, which shall be named the Henry W. Maxwell Memorial."

The new Long Island College Hospital is to consist of four sections. The two sections proposed to be erected by Mr. Maxwell are to form the main building on Henry Street. These will be wings on the Amity Street and Pacific Street sides. It is expected that friends of the late Dr. Alexander J. C. Skene will erect the Amity Street wing as a memorial to him, and it is intended to make an appeal to the public for funds with which to build the Pacific Street wing.

George Foster Peabody and his brothers, Royal and Charles Peabody, it is said, have offered to defray the expense of equipping an operating amphitheatre on the top floor of the Amity Street wing to accommodate 250 students.

The whole hospital structure will cost in the neighborhood of $1,000,000, and it is expected will be one of the most perfectly equipped in the whole country. In addition to the hospital building the institution possesses the Hoagland Laboratory, erected on Henry Street, opposite the hospital, by Dr. Cornelius N. Hoagland, the Polhemus Clinic, on the southwest corner of Amity and Henry Streets, erected by Mrs. Caroline H. Polhemus as a memorial to her husband, Henry D. Polhemus, and a home for nurses known as the Dudley Memorial, built by Henry W. Maxwell in memory of Dr. William H. Dudley, one of the organizers of the German Central Dispensary which afterward became the Long Island College Hospital. The latter building has just been completed and turned over to the Board of Regents of the hospital by Mr. Maxwell's executors. It is on the southeast corner of Henry and Amity Streets.

LIVELY SPEEDWAY SPORT

David Lamar Thrown from Upset While Driving Sally Simpson.

The Largest Crowd of the Year on the Drive — Trotters and Pacers in Close Tilts.

Thousands of spectators thronged the walks and every point of vantage along the Speedway yesterday morning to watch the fleet roadsters struggle for supremacy. It was the first Sunday of the year that the weather and footing have proved favorable for fast work, and horsemen throughout the city turned out in force to take full advantage of it. As a result there was a continuous line of vehicles reaching from the macadam at the approach to Dyckman Street, and the mounted policemen were kept busy keeping them in line and preventing collisions. The sport, which was of high class, proved exciting enough to please the most exacting, and rarely, even at a big trotting meet, could more enthusiastic finishes be seen during the same length of time.

Queen Wilkes, H. E. Smithers's unbeaten green trotter, as usual, figured prominently as a winner, while Ember Day, A. E. Ferrell's trotter, with a mark of 2:22¼, and the pacer Bell Boy, 2:07¼, driven by Frank Darrin, came in for a good share of the honors.

An exciting event that was entirely unexpected took place about noon, when the sport was at its height and the upper stretch, where the brushing was done, was crowded to its utmost capacity. David Lamar, behind the trotter Sally Simpson, 2:11¾, had just reached the north end of the upper stretch and was about to turn in order to start with Ember Day when the front axle of the wagon broke, and as the wheel dropped Mr. Lamar was thrown forward, landing heavily on the ground. He was up in an instant, unhurt, except for a few scratches, but Sally Simpson, who had been acting badly all morning, bolted before he could grasp her bridle, and started north at a furious gallop, dragging the wrecked wagon behind her. There was a general scramble for the curb and several narrow escapes, but the mare got through the crowd without a collision and continued her wild course along Dyckman Street. Mounted Policeman Maloney caught her, and she was taken back to the stable by her owner. Previous to this incident Sally Simpson had stepped three heats with Ember Day.

The first proved a nip and tuck go to the last hundred yards, when Sally Simpson broke and was beaten before she could recover her position. Ember Day broke near the head of the stretch in the second heat and was distanced, while Sally Simpson stepped home an easy winner in the third. It was at the start of the fourth that the accident occurred which brought the sport to an abrupt ending.

The Old Orchard Circuit campaigner, David B., with a trotting mark of 2:09, proved that he had lost none of his old-time speed when driven in a fast half-mile go with Fred Gorken's trotter Joe N. It was either horse's race until the final drive was made, when David B., urged by his owner, John W. Cornish, showed a burst of speed that landed him a winner by an open length. David Muscovite, the black pacer with a mark of 2:17¾ driven by Joseph Meyer, who made a general cleaning up of the road Friday afternoon, won two straight heats from The King, 2:10¾, driven by J. Jarvis, but finally fell a victim to the speed of the pacer Crescent, driven by M. Epstein. Dissatisfied with the result of the last brush, Mr. Meyer at once challenged Crescent, and Mr. Epstein accepting, the pair were jogged back to the start. It was a pretty race to the head of the stretch, where David Muscovite stepped out in front and won as he pleased.

By far the best four-cornered brush of the morning was between the four well-known trotters, Freeland, 2:17¾, driven by David Goodman; Ringwood, 2:17¾, driven by George Coleman; Diregs, driven by L. Simon, and George Gurnett, 2:16¾, driven by Claus Bolting. There was considerable jockeying before the quartet were got away on anything like even terms. Diregs rushed away in the lead and held it to the first quarter post, where her opponents lined up on even terms, the stretch with hardly half a length's difference between them. While leading, George Gurnett broke under the whip and was out of it, while Freeland stepped out in front and passed the post just a head in front of Ringwood.

Frank Darrin's pacer, Bell Boy, 2:07¼, had far too much speed for the pacing mare Alietta, 2:15¾, driven by John Hannan, and the trotter Swift, 2:16¾, driven by John F. Cockerill, President of the Road Drivers' Association of New York, won a half-mile heat from the trotter Sunbeam, driven by G. Seveen. The King, 2:10¾, gave Queen Wilkes one of the best and most exciting brushes of the morning, and for a few moments it looked as though the mare was going to suffer defeat, for when the final drive came it took her best effort to win out.

There was quite some delay in getting away and then Queen Wilkes made a handy break that cost her a length. Then King trotted like a piece of machinery to the first quarter post, without losing an inch of ground, and the head of the stretch was reached before Queen Wilkes began to lengthen her stride. Then step by step she began to gain on her rival, but it was no easy task, and as the post was reached the crowd saw the mare show her nose in front, and there was a burst of applause in her honor.

Thomas Lynch, Jr., drove the trotter Crystal Chimes to a winning brush with the trotter Thornton, driven by Mr. Lee. A. R. Meyer's bay pacer Peter H., 2:26¾, although short of work, stepped several fast quarters and Bonnie Kirkland, 2:23¾, driven by Louis Kahn, looked better and stepped faster than ever within the recollection of the frequenters of the road, winning three out of four brushes.

Among the many others who participated in and watched the sport were Morris Jones, driving Delphia and Content to the spin; A. B. Darvin, driving the bay pacer Ranter, (2:20); H. C. Mapes, driving his team, composed of Jennie C. (2:19¾) and Butterfly; R. Hersig, driving the bay trotter Messenger Boy; James Kennedy, behind the bay pacer N. T. B., (2:21¾;) J. Greenbaum, driving the black pacer Ammon; Andrew Crawford, behind the chestnut trotter Angelus, (2:12¾;) George Grote, with the trotter Ed Coy; Michael Feld, driving the trotter William B., (2:22¾;) David Newberger, driving Emilax, (2:21¾;) Matt Dwyer, behind a pair of show ring trotters, Elmer Stevens, driving the bay trotter Copeland, (2:09¾;) Nathan Ely, driving the trotter Fred Proctor, (2:24¼;) Charles Welland, driving a handsome cob; Clarence Wyatt, behind the pacer Stormy Weather, (2:14¾;) Dr. Flagge with the black pacer Alice Drake, (2:14¾;) Christopher Hackett, driving the pacer King Tom, (2:19¾;) C. H. McDonald, with the pacing pair Jack Crawford and John Crawford, and E. P. Hendrie, with the roan pacer Molly, (2:20.) During the afternoon the crowd of drivers on both the upper and lower stretch was even larger than that of the morning, but there was very little brushing.

CROSS-COUNTRY RUNNING.

Regular Weekly Competitions of Star and Mohawk Clubs Well Patronized.

Although several of the Star Athletic Club's runners had taken part in the indoor games at Madison Square Garden on Saturday night, the regular weekly cross-country run of that organization brought out a fair field of members and invited competitors yesterday. The roads were in fairly good condition as the time, 36:00 3-5, for 4½ miles, indicates. Sullivan, of the St. Bartholomew A. C., and Schell of the home club set a very hot pace, which they maintained for the greater part of the journey, and they came home like a team along Nott and Vernon Avenue. Within twenty yards of the finish Sullivan made an extra effort and got home first by about one yard in front of Schell with Kennedy, Moriarity and Moore strung out some thirty yards apart. The remainder of the competitors found the pace too strenuous for them, and many of them dropped out of the race. Some of those who finished the full course were from 4 to 6 minutes behind the winner in getting home. The order at the finish was as follows: J. Sullivan, St. Bartholomew A. C.; H. W. Schell, Star A. C.; D. Kennedy, Star A. C.; J. Moriarty, Star A. C.; J. Moore, St. Bartholomew A. C.; M. Rosenthal, Star A. C.; J. Miller, St. Bartholomew A. C.; H. Canty, Star A. C.; R. Fedtor, Star A. C.; A. Kerns, Star A. C.; E. Carrell, Star A. C.; F. Regal, Star A. C. and J. Butler, Star A. C.

The officials of the Mohawk Athletic Club of the Bronx laid out a four-mile run across country for their members yesterday, and eleven men, including C. Marks of the Pastime A. C., took part in the race. The route lay through Jerome Avenue to Fleetwood and Claremont Parks and back to the Walton Avenue Clubhouse. A. McKechnie, who got third place in the one-half mile handicap run in Madison Square Garden the night before, was the first man to reach the finish line, and his time, 22:00, was very good, indeed, if the course was correctly measured.

A challenge has been received and accepted by the Mohawk Athletic Club from the Mott Haven Athletic Club for a cross-country run to decide the club team championship of the Bronx. The teams are to consist of fifteen men each, and the first ten to finish from either side to get the prizes, which will be ten medals and a banner. No date has as yet been fixed for this contest. Following is the order in which the competitors in yesterday's run crossed the finish line: A. McKechnie, J. Kirk, C. Hubne, D. A. McCarthy, H. Meyer, C. Marks, W. Platt, J. Donovan, A. Michael, J. White, and L. Vaughan.

SUNDAY HANDBALL GAMES.

Champion Egan Showed Excellent Form in His Match Against James Dunne, Jr.

One of the fastest handball matches of the season was played yesterday in the Mercer Street court, Jersey City, between "Mike" Egan, the world's champion, and James Dunne, Jr., of the Brooklyn Handball Club. It was arranged for the sole purpose of testing how fast Egan is, and the result was very satisfactory to the champion and his followers, as he beat the young Brooklyn amateur four straight games. "Phil" Casey, the former world's champion, and his old-time partner, James Dunne, Sr., were among the Brooklyn men who witnessed the contest. They had no reason to find fault with young Dunne's work, as he played very lively and accurately all through the match, but he was outclassed by the cleverness of the champion, who is now playing better than at any stage of his professional career.

Next Saturday a match for the championship title will be begun at Egan's Jersey City court, the contestants being Louis Keegan of Chicago and "Mike" Egan. With the exception of the match with Oliver Drew, which still remains unfinished, Egan has not taken part in a championship contest since September, 1901, when he defeated "Phil" Carney of Gloucester, N. J. In Keegan it is said that Egan will find an opponent whose cleverness and steadiness make him a dangerous aspirant for championship honors, but the champion seems to have no fear for the result, and if hard work and almost continuous practice can keep him in good condition then Egan will play the game of his life when he meets the Chicago man on Saturday.

Keegan, who plays almost exclusively in Kennedy's Chicago handball court, is said to be in tiptop condition for this match, and if reports are true he is very confident of success. He will reach Jersey City on Wednesday or Thursday next, and will practice in Egan's court, so that a line may be secured on his style and capability in some of his preparatory games.

Nothing has been heard during the past week in regard to the proposed international handball match between Egan and Timothy Twohill of Kanturk, Ireland, but from an indirect source it is learned that Twohill will come to America some time this year, but probably not before the beginning of the Winter handball season.

A match which was watched with a good deal of interest was decided in Egan's court yesterday. Six weeks ago Charles Grupewitz defeated Dudley J. Fagan of Brooklyn at the Degraw Street court, the prize being a diamond studded emblem of the "Order of Seals." Fagan was not satisfied with the result, and Grupewitz decided to give him a return match in a neutral court. Since the first match was played Fagan had been practicing frequently, and he certainly showed wonderful improvement in his games yesterday, but Grupewitz was just a bit too strong for him and won two out of three very close games. Following are the scores of the contests at the court yesterday:

"Mike" Egan	21	21	21

William L. Jones of the Brooklyn Handball Club won his handicap match from Thomas Holmes of Caulfield's in the Degraw Street court yesterday. The match, which was begun a week ago, was for the best five out of nine games, Jones conceding Holmes five aces in each game. In the first half of the match each man won two games, but yesterday Jones secured three straight, ending the match. Oliver Drew won three games from John Murphy very easily yesterday, and is now in fine shape in case some matches which are being talked of come to an issue. Following are the scores of yesterday's games at Drew's court:

Oliver Drew	21	21	21

At Tarrant's court, Jersey City, the headquarters of the New Jersey Handball Club, some very fine games were played yesterday, the attendance of members being unusually large. Next Sunday a stake match will be decided at this court between four of the leading experts. The contesting pairs will be T. Dunn and J. Cunneen against J. Carlton and T. Lynch. The scores of yesterday's games follow:

Two handball matches were arranged at Caulfield's Brooklyn court yesterday. One of them, between Dr. Shea and P. J. Corby, will be decided in this court next Thursday. The other is a stake match in which F. Corbett and H. Burke will play against W. Slater and M. Ryan. These pairs represent Caulfield's and Drew's courts, respectively, and a lively game is looked for. Following are the scores of yesterday's single and double matches:

MOTOR CYCLE CLUB ACTS

Proposes to Effect a National Organization.

Massachusetts Automobile Club to Have $200,000 Home—American Machines in Malta—Automobile News.

As has been several times remarked, the peculiar nature of the motor bicycle, which by a twist of the wrist or the shift of a belt is instantly changed from a self-propelled to a muscularly driven bicycle, has left its status open to wide discussion and weighted the future with interesting probabilities.

Realising that fact, the New York Motor Cycle Club Saturday night took the initiative in an effort to safeguard the interests for which it stands. The move took the form of the appointment of a committee of three to obtain an expression of opinion from other motor cycle clubs and unattached riders as to the desirability of effecting a National organization.

The fact that the inactive League of American Wheelmen has done nothing since adopting a resolution "recognizing" motor cyclists a year ago, and that the automobile organizations are intent only on promoting and safeguarding their own interests was made plain; this, coupled with the rapid increase of laws which while designed to apply to big cars are either impossible or can be made to bear with undue weight on motor bicycles, induced the New York club to take action.

If the expressions obtained make evident that a National organization of the sort is wanted, the idea is to issue a call for a convention of motor cyclists at some central point during the early Summer, and there bring the organization into being. The committee intrusted with the preliminary step is composed of E. L. Ferguson, Dr. F. A. Roy, and R. G. Betts, respectively the Vice President, Secretary, and Governor of the New York Motor Cycle Club, the last mentioned being the Chairman of the committee.

At Saturday night's meeting it was suggested that the President of the League of American Wheelmen be communicated with to ascertain whether that body purposed doing more than enact resolutions, but ex-Capt. Moskovics nailed the suggestion pardi once in that direction. "This city," he said, "there is a letter in evidence from the head of the League of American Wheelmen stating that there was not life or interest enough in the organization to form a division or even twelve members in the recent silver jubilee parade. In the face of such a confession it seems to me that other letter writing will mean merely delay and a waste of good ink and postage stamps."

The bill authorising the holding of the race for the Bennett International Trophy, having passed the House of Commons, is now pending in the House of Lords, where it is expected it will meet with no opposition. The Automobile Club of France has notified the Automobile Club of Great Britain and Ireland of its acceptance of the date of July 9, so that it is considered that the matter is decided, and definite arrangements for the race are now being made.

A grand tour of Ireland is now being arranged, in which several hundred automobiles are expected to take part and for which hotel accommodations are already being booked. There will also be races in Phoenix Park, Dublin, and hill-climbing competitions up the Rhorgin Road hill, near Tralee, for the Kerry Council Cup.

John H. Grout, United States Consul at Malta, reports to the Department of State that several automobiles of American make are in use on that island and that he has received a number of requests for information from prospective purchasers. Mr. Grout's report says:

"A gentleman recently went to England, and after looking at the various makes of machines there, purchased an American one, which is giving good satisfaction. This machine is of the steam variety, being the only one of its kind in Malta. The others are operated by gasoline. One firm desires to procure cars large vans for delivery of goods. No fault is found with gasoline machines except that it is somewhat difficult at times to procure gasoline on account of local laws. It is imported from Marseilles and other places, but the supply is apt to be limited.

"American manufacturers of automobiles should bears in mind that Malta does not possess, as a rule, long, level stretches of road. There are many steep hills, one of them having a grade of 1 in 9. The machine should be much more powerful than is the rule in the United States. Another thing to be remembered is that in giving price the manufacturer must quote free on board New York, otherwise the inquirer will not know what his machine is going to cost him. People in Malta know nothing about distances or freight rates between ports of shipment and the interior cities. Several negotiations have failed because the dealer in the United States insisted upon quoting prices free on board Chicago or other place of export. When possible, it is ever better to give prices cost, insurance, and freight Malta. In other words, when the buyer at Malta writes for terms he should be given information which will enable him to figure exactly what the machine will cost him landed there.

"If information as to the cubic measurement of the machine, as crated or boxed for shipment, can be given, it will add to the satisfaction of the buyer. Some time ago an American carriage manufactured to order for our interior cities was sold in Malta, and one of the greatest points considered was the completeness of the information given in the catalogue, I provided other catalogues which were prepared in attractive style and showed desirable goods, but information as to terms, &c., was very meagre, and they were not considered. It must be remembered that transportation from New York to Malta is now again by way of a direct line of steamers."

A new clubhouse will be built by the Massachusetts Automobile Club in Boylston Street, near the Fenway, at an estimated cost of $200,000. It will accommodate 125 vehicles and contain a fully equipped machine shop in the basement. The two upper floors will contain the clubrooms.

A bill has been introduced in the Minnesota State Legislature which proposes to appropriate $1,000 for each county in the State, to be used in the construction of good roads. The county is to bear one-third of the cost of construction or improvements of such roads, the township in which the road is located one-third, and the State will bear the other third, not to exceed $1,600. The County Commissioners are to notify townships of the appropriation and the conditions attaching to it, and townships willing to construct roads on these terms are to report to the county board. A committee of the County Commissioners will then investigate the work and decide on what it is best to undertake, endeavoring to apportion the work equitably among the townships desiring to take advantage of the State and county aid. Townships are empowered to issue orders and levy a special tax to raise money for building roads under the provisions of the bill. The county part of the cost can be paid from the road and bridge fund, or, if that is exhausted, from the general fund of the county. The bill provides that all work shall be done by contract, let to the lowest responsible bidder, under the supervision of the County Surveyor and a committee of three of the County Commissioners.

GOLF FOR COLLEGE TEAMS

Princeton, Yale, and Columbia Arranging Matches.

Inter-Class Competitions for April — Pinehurst North and South Championship This Month.

College golfers are making active arrangements for the present season, and although the Spring will have no intercollegiate championship tournament, there will be enough big events on hand outside of the college team and handicap matches to keep the student players busy. From all indications there will be a big entry of college golfers in the amateur championship at Nassau Country in September, and the May and June tournaments will be utilised as much as possible for the sharp competitive practice which they always furnish. Captain Stevens of the Columbia University team is endeavoring to arrange a number of team matches with neighboring clubs and there is a possibility that some good new material will enter college, so that a strong team may be picked for the intercollegiate championship in the Fall.

The Princeton Golf Club has come out with its schedule of events in the lead. A number of excellent team matches will be played, which will bring the collegians in contact with some of the best local players. These include matches with Essex County at Orange, April 25; Englewood on May 4, and Garden City on May 16. The most interesting match, from the student point of view, however, is that with Yale on May 2. A metropolitan course will probably be selected. The series of inter-class championship team matches will begin on Tuesday, April 21, on the links of the Princeton Country Club and continue through April 25. The junior class team won the honor last year. The winning team holds the George Arents Brokaw Cup, presented in 1902, until the following series of matches. The new class Captains for the season are: Senior, L. B. Garretson; junior L. H. Conklin; sophomore, F. O. Reinhart; freshman, Louis N. James. The latter is the young Chicagoan who won the National Amateur Championship last year. All of the other men are veteran players, and in addition Percy R. Pyne and W. Baker will be members of the regular Varsity team. The first event will be an eighteen-hole medal play contest for the Captain's Cup, on April 21.

The Yale golfers are playing on their New Haven links, and the inter-class matches will be the leading university golf feature next month.

Two neighboring golf associations have just formulated plans for the year, the Essex County League and the Connecticut League. The championship tournament of the latter will be held at the New Haven Country Club, probably in August. Francis R. Cooley of Hartford was elected President, and Amos F. Barnes of New Haven, Secretary and Treasurer. In addition, the Executive Committee consists of C. P. Bryan, Waterbury; W. E. Seeley, Bridgeport; W. P. Felt, New Britain, and Frederick P. Chase, New Haven. The East Jersey League elected officers as follows: President—Paul E. Heller, Forest Hill; Vice President, G. W. Lethbridge, South Orange; Secretary and Treasurer, F. H. Thompson. A system of team matches will be drawn upon between the clubs now in the league, including Morristown Field, South Orange, Colonia Country, East Orange, Forest Hill, and Elizabeth Town and Country.

The Park Golf Club of Plainfield, N. J., which had one of the most successful seasons in its history last year, has made plans for an early opening this season. The course is now being put in condition, and it is the intention to open it early in April, even if temporary greens have to be used for a while. The club membership is now 156, and the officers elected for the year are: President—Charles W. McCutcheon; Vice President—George T. Rogers; Secretary—Charles B. Morse; Treasurer—William R. Faber. Samuel Townsend will be Chairman of the Golf Committee, and his associates are S. S. St. John, McCutcheon, Charles B. Morse, and Wallace M. Brown. George T. Rogers will be Chairman of the Greens Committee.

The New Brunswick Golf Club has picked its team for the season, although changes may occur from time to time. William R. Hill is the Captain, and the members will be T. L. Smith, N. Williamson, J. R. Kirkpatrick, Jr., R. R. Wilson, Hude Heilson, E. L. Stevenson, Charles Runyon, L. Runyon, and Andrew Kirkpatrick.

The annual meeting of the Oakland Golf Club of Bayside, L.I., will be held on Wednesday evening at Delmonico's. The chief business will be the election of members of the Board of Governors. George L. Shearer has been nominated for the one-year term, while for the two-year term the nominees are C. H. Taylor, S. R. Mitchell, J. V. C. Miller, C. R. Dean, and Dr. W. S. Brown. Later in the month the Governors will elect the officers, when the committees will be apointed and the schedule of events for the year will be arranged.

Among the coming golf fixtures in the South will be the mid-South and South open championship tournament, to be held at the Pinehurst Club Links, N. C., on March 28, 30 and 31. This event always attracts a large field of the amateur players from many parts of the country. A new record, 76 strokes, for the Pinehurst course, was established recently by F. C. Reynolds of the Essex County Country Club, of Orange, N. J. The figures are:

Out	4	3	4	5	4	4	5	4	—33
In	5	3	5	4	5	4	5	4	—43—76

The best previous card was that of C. H. Bartlett of Westfield, Mass., 76 strokes, made a year ago. The detailed programme for the championship events is:

Saturday, March 28—Men's qualification round, 36 holes, medal play. Thirty-two best scores qualify for the match play rounds in the men's open championship.

Monday, March 30—First and second rounds of men's open championship, 18 holes, match play; Women's qualification round, 18 holes, medal play. The four best gross scores qualify for the match play rounds in the women's open championship. First round for men's consolation cup, 18 holes, match play. The defeated participants in the first match play of men's open championship, qualify for this event.

Tuesday, March 31—Semi-final and final rounds of the men's open championship and consolation, and women's open championship, 18 holes, medal play.

There will be several special events, driving, approaching, and putting contests.

Harry Vardon, the three-year open champion of England, who made such a triumphal tour through this country three years ago, has left the Mossenreigh Golf Club at Cannon, where he was the professional for a number of years, and has accepted the position of professional to the Totteridge Golf Club, near London. Edward Ray, one of the young and promising professional golfers of Great Britain, has been appointed in Vardon's old place.

The formation of sectional golf associations is not confined to America, for even in the land of golf's greatest age the game is always growing and the increasing interest taken by women has another illustration this Winter by the efforts to organize a woman's golf association in Scotland. Both England and Ireland have women's organizations, but the fair players in the land which is hallowed by centuries of St. Andrew golf traditions, have never had a championship of their own. The Scotchwomen have never taken so prominent a place in golf in Great Britain as their sisters in England or Ireland, but a change for the better seems assured this year. The Ladies' Golf Club of St. Andrews has taken the initiative in the matter, and plans are well under way for the first women's championship tournament of Scotland. The women of Ireland have held their own championship meetings ever year since 1894, and as one result, they have always figured prominently in the larger championship at Great Britain. It is practically due to the skill and ability of the women of Erin's Isle that the championship of the United Kingdom is to be held in Ireland this year, at the Portrush Golf Club. The Scotchwomen hope to hold their first championship in June at St. Andrews.

City Island Yacht News.

Special to The New York Times.

CITY ISLAND, March 15.—A new yawl for Dr. Richard Schofield, designed by Charles Davis, is nearing completion at the Hansen yard. The deckhouse and inside fittings will be made of mahogany and the best of material only will be used. An eight-horse power gasoline motor will furnish auxiliary power. Her dimensions are 37 feet over all, 27 feet waterline, 10 feet beam, and 3 feet 6 inches draught. The boat will be launched about June 1. An 80-foot modern steam yacht is under way at the same yard for William Holtz.

Mr. Hansen is also rebuilding Dr. Dougherty's auxiliary sloop yacht Vayu, converting her from a centreboard to a keel boat. The frame of the new keel is in place and will be completed some time next month.

Soloist

Mr. Alois Burgstaller, Tenor

GRAU OPERA COMPANY

THE GREAT SUCCESS of the concerts given several seasons ago at Mendelssohn Hall, at which Mme. Nordica and M. Edouard de Reszke sang, accompanied by the Aeolian, and the more recent success of the recitals at the Waldorf-Astoria, when the "Persian Garden" was sung by prominent local artists, assisted by the Pianola, has induced us to arrange the present series of special concerts for the season of 1902-1903.

These entertainments will be given in Aeolian Hall, and the principal vocal and instrumental soloists who will appear in New York this winter will take part.

The fourth of these special recitals will take place next Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The soloist will be Mr. Alois Burgstaller, the famous tenor of the Grau Opera Company. His accompaniments will be played with the Pianola.

TAX COMMISSION'S REPORT

Principal Recommendations to the State Legislature.

Taxation of Mortgages, Flat Tax on Personal Property, and Heavier Taxation of Unimproved Property Urged—"Dodging" Denounced.

ALBANY, March 15.—Taxation of mortgages; no deduction from personal taxation for debt; a flat tax of 1 per cent. upon all personal property, including stocks of goods in stores, and no deductions for debts; publicity of all assessment by advertising; taxation at higher value of all unimproved property and vacant lands, so as to stimulate and encourage improvements; increase of per diem of local Assessors; providing that appeals from local taxation may be made direct to the State Tax Commission, the decision to be final.

These are some of the recommendations made in the annual report of the Tax Commission to go to the Senate to-morrow night. The report is in a great measure devoted to discussion of tax "dodging" by wealthy men, and the commission expresses very broadly its opinion. It says in part:

"Ostensibly Assessors assess personal property while, in fact, in the larger number, and more important instances the assessed assess themselves. Not only is the law impotent in this particular, but the selfish interest of a locality holds dominant sway. By menace of removal of person, office, factory, or residence, millions of actual and liable personal shrink to thousands upon a roll.

"Possessors of personal property have come not largely to arrogate to themselves the functions of lawmakers and administrators of self-made law. They in effect repeal or nullify a statute because opposed to 'double taxation,' taxation of 'mere obligations,' or 'evidences of debts.' The rivalry is for the least mark obtainable upon the roll in too many cases. The general effect is deplorable, where the conspicuously wealthy are forfeiting residence or creating accommodating and transitory obligations for deduction. The query is arising with growing frequency and emphasis, 'Why should deductions for debt, actual or temporarily incurred, be permitted to personal and denied to real property?'

"A vague indication of the tangible wealth of the State is given in the total individual deposits of its financial institutions. From the latest reports the following is disclosed:

"State and National banks, $963,114,200; trust companies, $734,342,856; savings banks, $1,077,393,743, aggregating $2,794,-850,799.

"The appointments and furnishings of the households of the State unassessed and untaxed undoubtedly represent billions in actual value. Few and small are the entries upon tax rolls of stocks of goods in stores and ledger credits. These are assessed or represented to be offset by ledger debits. In some if not all cities, it has become fashionable to maintain a mortgage upon the store structure for deduction of utility against goods assessment. In provision against the transfer of death envelopes are found to contain in sacrificial advance apportionment among heirs of large estates awaiting deathbed or later delivery.

"This suggests that an amendment to the present tax law, by which all personal property, except that legally exempted, including stocks of goods in stores, shall pay a flat tax of 1 per cent. upon its valuation as found by the local Assessors without any deduction whatever for debt might be a step in the right direction in the way of personal assessment, and might result in turning into both Treasuries large additional amounts of taxes upon personal for the relief of real estate. This plan has precedents in the treatment of trust company and bank shares and savings bank tax, to a specified extent, a small flat rate, and in denial of debt deduction to shareholders in consequence of the low rate.

"One of the repugnant features of prevailing assessment is that one penalizing improvement. A citizen may expend 5,000 in interior decoration or decking of his home without incurring proportionate increase of his assessment. A like sum expended upon exterior improvement of a home, ornamentation of a street, and beautifying of a community is promptly punished by increase of assessment. The effect of this system is to encourage neglect of homesteads, it being well understood that a neatly maintained homestead is more valuable in the eyes of Assessors than a neglected, weather-worn habitation. Under our existing law Assessors cannot be fairly criticised, but it is prejudicial to the State, to communities, and to civic and individual progress and pride that improvement and advancement should be discouraged by fine. Could unimproved homes and vacant lands be the heavier assessed, sale of material and employment of labor would increase, handsomer communities would materialize, and the State take a long stride forward.

"There was an increase of $121,943,800 in the value of real estate in this State last year over the preceding year, while at the same time there was a decrease in assessed personal property to the extent of $28,-512,787, leaving a net general increase of $92,631,072. The total amount of taxable property given by the State Board of Tax Commissioners in their annual report is $5,081,579,719 in realty and $972,756,160 in personal. A summary shows a total of $127,702,700.43 paid in taxes in 1901 for the objects following:

"City, $71,600,713.44; local schools, $28,-865,911.12; county, $11,051,967.85; State, $9,-867,815.06; towns, $4,219,208.84; village, $3,-151,500.65.

"The latest assessment of the realty of the great metropolis attempts at an approximation to full value. A corresponding increase in tax rate ensues. This compliance with law is commendable, and its influence throughout the State must prove helpful.

"After recent and careful investigation of the findings of the New York City Department of Taxes and Assessments under the administration of Commissioner James Wells and his fellow-Commissioners and Deputies the State Board is pleased to have to express and record unreserved appreciation of the methods and efforts of the metropolitan tax officials in their endeavor to force a showing of practically full values upon the rolls within their jurisdiction. By their action they have rectified the unfounded but annually repeated attacks upon the percentage rating accorded New York in the State table of equalization.

"Until the disclosures of undervaluations under the administration of Commissioner Wells, it had been insistently and loudly proclaimed that metropolitan property was being assessed at full value, while the State officials in equalizing were so rated. The New York department under the present administration demonstrates the unfairness of its assertions and contentions in former years.

"It should be known that until 1904—by which time there may be no direct State and consequently no State equalization table—New York City can secure no State recognition by advance in percentage rating for the excellent work being done upon its tax records. State equalization is made of necessity upon the rolls of the year preceding the State equalization of 1905—the tax collections of 1904 must be based upon the assessment of 1903.

"Already it is being realized in New York City that the individual advancements where warranted and the general equalization to a uniform standard approaching the legal requirement are to result in benefits not hardship to the small-property holders, including tenants. Better understanding is rapidly succeeding protest, with praise in the metropolitan district, the larger half of the State in proportion and in people."

Magistrate Fined His Own Prisoners.

Samuel George of 50 West Eighth Street and John Doanel of 406 East Sixty-fourth Street, who were arrested by Magistrate Brann on Saturday for fighting on the street, were arraigned before him yesterday in the Tombs Police Court. The Magistrate swore to a formal complaint against them, charging them with disorderly conduct, and fined them $10 each. They were unable to pay and went to jail.

STATE SANITARY REPORT

Death Rate During 1902 Was Seventeen Per Thousand.

Prevalence of Typhoid Traceable to Negligence—How Protection of Water Supply May Be Secured.

ALBANY, March 15.—The State Board of Health will submit to Gov. Odell tomorrow night a report stating that the general sanitary condition of the State when compared with former years is satisfactory. The total number of deaths reported during the year was 124,160, making a death rate of seventeen per 1,000 population. This is the average death rate for the five preceding years, but is about 5,000 less than the mortality for 1901.

One satisfactory feature appears in the report of deaths occurring under five years of age, which shows a total of 5,000 less than the average, this saving having chiefly occurred in the rural parts of the State. The mortality from preventable diseases was 14 per cent. of the total, which was above the average of preceding years. This increase was due to a considerable extent to the continued prevalence of smallpox in various portions of the State, which disease caused a total of 442 deaths from the year.

Typhoid fever was the cause of 1,318 deaths, which was over 300 less than the annual average for the past five years. The deaths from pulmonary consumption were 12,382, which shows a decided decrease from preceding years, the average for the past five years having been 13,270. This gratifying decrease in the death rate from pulmonary consumption is believed to be largely due to the measures for prevention which are being more thoroughly understood by the public at large, as well as the medical practitioners who have charge of these cases in their incipient stage.

The somewhat general prevalence of the epidemic of smallpox which prevailed during 1901 and continued to about the same extent during the past year, has brought into prominence the prophylactic value of vaccination, for reports show that nearly all the reported cases of smallpox occurred with persons who were either unvaccinated or had not been vaccinated since childhood.

"Reference has been made," says the report, "to the fact that 1,318 deaths from typhoid fever occurred in the State during the past year. It is fair to state that each one of these deaths was the result of neglect to supply pure water, and that nearly, if not all, of them could have been prevented if the recognized requirements for the protection of water supplies had been in operation in every instance.

"Under the law now in force, rules for the protection of water supplies may be formulated by the State Department of Health upon application by the municipality using the water, by the company supplying it, or by an individual. It is the custom of the department to make such rules sufficiently comprehensive to prevent all contamination of a dangerous or doubtful character. When such rules are approved by the State Commissioner of Health, and published for six weeks in a newspaper in the county or counties in which the water shed is located, they have all the force of law, and prosecutions may be made against offenders, and penalties imposed."

As a very general pollution of the water courses and bodies of water throughout the State was believed to exist, the department undertook an inspection of a large number at widely separated points in the State during the past year and secured evidence of the very general neglect to protect the purity of these various supplies. Immediate and general legislation which shall at least prevent an increase of these contaminations seems to be a public necessity. To meet this necessity a bill for the prevention of the pollution of fresh waters of the State by limiting or absolutely preventing the discharge of untreated sewage and other refuse or waste matters, has been prepared and introduced in the Legislature.

Through the liberality of the citizens of Buffalo a very excellent building has been erected for the cancer laboratory and the investigation of the great questions relating to the causation, distribution, and treatment of cancerous diseases has been steadily carried forward during the year.

The work of the Antitoxin Laboratory, auspiciously inaugurated last year, has developed into very gratifying usefulness. The demands made upon the laboratory for diphtheria antitoxin, especially have steadily increased since the distribution began. This widespread distribution insures the prompt treatment of the proper cases, even if located in the most inaccessible parts of the State.

The report refers to the Bureau of Pathology and Bacteriology, one of the most important duties of which is the examination of samples of water furnished by the local health officers throughout the State. The applications for these examinations are becoming more and more numerous, as their value becomes appreciated by the towns and villages having a water supply. It is fair to state that if every water supply throughout the State was regularly examined and the results published, the security thereby given those whose sources of supply are satisfactory, and the warning of danger in cases where greater protection and purification are called for would be a great advance in preventive medicine over existing conditions.

The report says that to meet all the calls which are made for examinations of food and drugs would require some additional appropriation from the Legislature. It has heretofore seemed essential that there should be a regularly appointed collector of samples of food and drugs for analysis. Such work could very properly be delegated to the local health officers throughout the State, and if the proposition to have a health officer appointed by the State Department should be adopted, such officer would be more thoroughly in harmony with the plan of such examinations, and could more properly be requested to perform such duties in the interest of public health than at present.

The report also says a more general test of illuminating oils should be made by the Bureau of Chemistry. The importance of this testing of illuminating oils as a public health measure may be readily appreciated by reference to the large number of accidents—many of them resulting fatally—which have occurred and are constantly occurring from the explosion of oil lamps and oil cans, the contents of which, when tested, have been shown to be below the standard or flash point required by the standard authorities.

Attention is called to the fact that the construction of sewers and disposal works, plans for which have been approved by the engineers of this department, should be inspected during the course of construction, and afterward, by a competent officer.

CHILD LABOR IN THE STATE.

Constant Official Vigilance Needed to Secure Compliance with the Law.

ALBANY, March 15.—State Labor Commissioner John McMackin, discussing the work of his department last year with reference to child labor, says:

The motive to use child labor does not seem to lose strength with the passage of years, and constant care is needed on the part of the officials to secure compliance with the law. Last year the Inspectors found children illegally employed in 2,807 factories. In most cases, to be sure, (2,306,) the non-compliance with the law consisted in employing children of legal age without the certificate required by law, but there were 274 factories in which children were found working who were either illiterate or under the legal age of employment, (14 years.) The number of the former class was 150 and of the latter 208. The total number of children under 16 years legally employed was 16,750.

This is the largest number recorded since 1891, but at the same time the number of factories inspected was much smaller. Only 2.2 per cent. of all employes were children, which is about the same percentage as has prevailed for several years. There were also 56 complaints made to the bureau relative to the illegal employment of children, of which 33 were upon investigation sustained. The causes of complaint were as follows: Employing children under 14 years of age, 44 children under 16 years without certificates, 6 illiterate children, and 7 children under 16 years on dangerous machinery. Five firms were prosecuted for employing children under 16 years and four of them convicted.

Speaking of conditions in tenements, Commissioner McMackin says:

The control over tenement work secured by the bureau is now manifestly more complete than it has been and there are certainly fewer places in which manufacturing is carried on without the required license. The total number of complaints made to the department concerning illegal work was 1,160 in 1900, the first year of the licensing law's operation, and 940 in the ten months covered by the report of 1901, while there were only 240 such complaints in 1902. Of these 199 charged that manufacturing was being carried on in tenements without a license; 26 of these complaints were upon investigation sustained and 70 not sustained. The bureau also received 23 complaints that work was being done under unsanitary conditions, but investigation sustained only 12 of these complaints. In such cases the license was revoked, but these revocations constituted a small fraction of the entire number of licenses revoked—396—as a result of the semi-annual inspection made by the bureau. All the places whose licenses were revoked were in New York City.

Two prosecutions were undertaken against firms who gave out work to be done in unlicensed tenement houses and one against a firm that failed to keep register of outside work. Convictions followed in the three cases.

The State Factory Inspector's force inspected in New York City last year 16,141 factories, issued 10,001 permits to children to work regularly and 3,250 to children to work during vacation, and inspected and investigated 15,000 tenement houses and workshops.

STATE INSURANCE REPORT.

Mr. Hendricks Wants New Laws as to Lloyds Associations.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, March 15.—At the close of the year 1902, reports State Superintendent of Insurance Hendricks, the fire, fire-marine, and marine insurance companies doing business in this State were possessed of $361,-308,011 of admitted assets, not including assets held abroad nor premium notes of mutual companies, an increase of $20,399,-198, as compared with 1901. The liabilities of these companies, with the exception of scrip and capital, were $181,055,126, an increase of $13,948,211 over the return of the preceding year. The income was $232,815,-497, and the disbursements were $187,403,-520, an increase as compared with 1901 of $46,798,065 in income, and $16,765,850 in disbursements. The number of companies reporting in 1902 was 165, being one less than 1901. There was received $211,980,-773.46 in premiums, $102,830,100.73 was paid for losses, $77,229,506.67 for miscellaneous disbursements, and $7,993,910.77 for dividends.

The fire premiums received were $31,154,-005.57, fire losses paid $15,184,746.92, and fire losses incurred $14,746,832.33, showing an apparent net excess of fire premiums received over fire losses incurred of $16,405,-773.24.

The estimated expense for the transaction of this business is $10,384,868.52, which, if added to the incurred losses, makes a total of $25,133,700.85. On this basis the excess of fire premiums received over fire losses incurred was $6,020,904.

The Superintendent pays special attention to Lloyds Associations, presenting this argument:

Lloyds Associations of individual underwriters are exempted from the provisions of the insurance law. They make no reports to the Insurance Department nor are they under its supervision. This exemption aplies only to such Lloyds as were lawfully engaged in the business of insurance in this State on the first day of October, 1892.

At the instance of the Superintendent of Insurance the Attorney General, in 1894, commenced proceedings for the purpose of determining the rights of a large number of these associations to the exemptions claimed by them. These proceedings revealed the fact that upward of twenty associations were not lawfully and in good faith doing business on Oct. 1, 1892. Since these proceedings terminated there has been serious question of the right of many more of these associations to the exemptions provided by the law. For the purpose of determining what associations were in good faith engaged in the business of insurance on Oct. 1, 1892, I last year recommended the passage of an act requiring all Lloyds Associations claiming the right to do business to file with the Insurance Department, on or before Sept. 1, 1903, certified copies of their original articles of agreement, with amendments thereto. This act became a law April 9, 1902, and in pursuance of its provisions thirty-one Lloyds Associations filed the required reports with this department.

I requested the co-operation of the Attorney General in an examination of the papers so filed, and in November of last year that official designated the Deputy Attorney General to make an investigation of the claims of each of the Lloyds Associations to the exemptions contained in Section 87. The report of this examination is now in the hands of the Attorney General, and actions will soon be commenced against eleven of fifteen Lloyds concerns whose right to do the business of insurance has been shown to be entirely without foundation, or at least very questionable.

The insurance law provides that insurance corporations doing business in this State must use the standard form of policy, with the permissible riders thereto, which is on file in the Insurance Department. They may not use any form of policy which does not conform to the standard policy in all particulars—size of type, contract, provisions, agreements, and conditions. Lloyds Associations are not corporations, and are not therefore required to use the standard form of policy. It is the custom, however, of many of them to print an indorsement upon their policies to the effect that they are in the standard form prescribed by law. As a matter of fact, all of these policies contain provisions which are not found in the standard form. I am of the opinion that such indorsement is not in the interest of the insuring public, and I favor the passage of an act prohibiting the indorsement upon a Lloyds policy of words which will convey the impression that it is the standard form of policy established by the Legislature.

I also recommend that a law be enacted providing that Lloyds Associations shall annually file with the Superintendent of Insurance a statement of their affairs for the year. The insuring public is entitled to such information as will enable it to judge of the financial responsibility of the individual underwriters of Lloyds Associations. The purchasers of Lloyds policies are entitled to know the names of the individual underwriters, to a knowledge of the powers of attorney under which they operate, and of the amount for which each underwriter is personally liable. They are also entitled to a report of their financial condition showing their assets and liabilities and the income and disbursements for the year.

The reports by all the fire, fire-marine, and marine companies which made returns to the department show $24,907,717,158 of risks in force. During the year the companies, with the exception of the New York Mutuals, (5,) for $256,963,684.26 in gross premiums, undertook to carry $23,619,122,972 of risks, an average premium of 1.04 for every $100 insured.

The amount of fire risks written in 1901 was $4,063,280,152; in 1902, $4,305,760,976, an increase of $220,480,824. The amount of marine and inland risks written in 1901 was $537,655,903; in 1902, $505,180,523, a decrease of $32,475,380.

NEW YORK LEGISLATURE

Revised Tax Programme Will Be Taken Up This Week.

Excise Hearing Wednesday Promises to be One of the Largest of the Year—Mortgage Tax Bill Secure.

ALBANY, March 15.—The revised tax programme will be taken up in the Legislature this week and urged by Gov. Odell. It is expected that both the amendment to the liquor tax law advancing fees 50 per cent., and the Mortgage Tax bill will be rapidly advanced through both branches and it is expected will be on the Executive's desk by April 1. The excise hearing undoubtedly will be one of the largest of the year, for the liquor dealers' associations, National, State, and local; the brewers' associations, and kindred organizations will send delegations, and the probabilities are that it will be necessary to transfer the hearing from the Senate to the Assembly Chamber.

One Senator, Hill of Buffalo, and two Assemblymen, Reuhl and Patton, from the same city, are the only legislators who refused their support to the Excise bill. But one hearing on this Excise bill is contemplated, and the plan is to report it favorably to both Senate and Assembly Thursday morning, after the hearing Wednesday. The following Tuesday it will be passed and soon after handed to the Governor.

In the meantime the Mortgage Tax bill will appear and remain quiescent until the Liquor Tax bill is ready for introduction Monday night. Every effort has been made to make it perfect and invulnerable. While Speaker Nixon of the Assembly is opposed to a Mortgage Tax bill, he participated in the caucus the other evening, and subsequently assured the Governor that there would be a sufficient number of votes in the Assembly to pass it. In caucus ten Assemblymen voted against making the Mortgage Tax bill a party measure. There are 89 Republican Assemblymen, however, and it takes but 76 to pass a bill. In the Senate all the Republican Senators, with the exception of Senator White, (who is ill and will not attend this year's session,) are bound to support the Mortgage Tax bill. There are 27 Republican Senators, and 26 votes are necessary to pass the bill. The mortgage tax is expected to raise between $12,000,000 and $15,-000,000, half to go to the State and half to the localities. The only mortgages exempt are those of charitable, religious, and educational institutions.

This is expected to be an interesting week for the canal improvement men. There are now two canal propositions before the Senate, the Davis-Bostwick bill for the expenditure of $101,000,000 for canal improvement, and the Lewis resolution for the appointment of a commission to confer with Federal authorities relative to the construction of a deep waterway through the State to the great lakes and to ascertain what arrangement can be made between State and Federal Government.

The Elsberg bill abolishing the office of Coroner in Greater New York and providing for the appointment of medical examiners will be debated on, third reading in the Senate Wednesday.

The Governor has decided, it is believed, that there will be no necessity for franchise tax legislation at this session. He is quoted as saying to several persons interested in the question that in view of the fact that no matter what the decision of the Court of Appeals may be on the constitutionality of the present law, the Supreme Court of the United States is to pass on the matter, there is little need of worrying this Legislature with it. He thinks that if the law should be killed finally the question of substituting a tax upon the gross income of all corporations operating public utilities can be deferred for one year.

Discussion of dates for final adjournment is in progress. Speaker Nixon says it will be about April 15, while Lieut. Gov. Higgins is authority for the statement that it will not be earlier than May 1. It is likely that the date will be fixed finally at some period between these two extremes.

In the Assembly the Finch Child Labor bills will be ready for discussion Tuesday. There will be a fight Wednesday before the Assembly Railroads Committee on the Barnes bill providing for the vestibuling of all street surface cars on two sides of the platform throughout the entire State except New York City. The bill got through the Senate only after much opposition.

These hearings will be given Tuesday by the Senate Cities Committee: Marshall Police Magistrates bill for Brooklyn, Marshall bill regulating the sale of liquors in Wallabout Market in Brooklyn, Hill Seawall bill, Buffalo; Davis bill for the betterment of the car service, Keenan bill amending New York charter relative to assessments, Plunkitt bill relative to street sprinkling in New York, McClelland bill regulating use of streets as hack stands, Morgan bill relative to Courts of Special Sessions in New York.

Wednesday before the Judiciary Committee hearings will be given on three Child Labor bills. Wednesday also Joint hearing in the Senate Chamber on 50 per cent. advance in excise fees.

The Senate Finance Committee will give a hearing on the Lawis Water Storage Commission bill Tuesday.

The Assembly Committee on Public Health will give hearings next Wednesday on the Prince Canned Goods and Bedding bills and the various bills providing for the registration of trained nurses in the State. The Cities Committee will try to clear up all of the New York and Buffalo bills in its hands at its Tuesday and Thursday sessions.

SMOKE OVERCOMES RESCUER.

Policeman McHugh Falls in Hallway with Man He is Carrying—Both Found Unconscious.

In a fire early yesterday morning which caused $2,000 damage in the saloon of Hugh Morrow, at 126 West One Hundredth Street, Policeman McHugh of the West One Hundredth Street Station was burned severely about the face and hands and was overcome with smoke while rescuing Harry Marden, a porter, who had been sleeping in a rear room up stairs. Both men were pulled out from the smoke-filled hallway into the street by Policeman Beckett, who turned in the alarm.

A call was sent to J. Hood Wright Hospital, and the ambulance surgeon, Dr. Klein, had some difficulty in restoring the men to consciousness. After McHugh's burns were dressed he was taken home. Marden, whose condition is serious, was taken to the hospital.

When the fire was discovered, McHugh, who knew of Marden's custom to sleep in the building, broke open one of the side doors of the place, and although it was filled with smoke he rushed into the hallway and upstairs, and when he reached the bedroom he found that the flames had already eaten their way through the floor and had just started to burn the bed clothes on the cot on which Marden was lying unconscious.

McHugh picked up Marden and threw him across his shoulder. Then he ran down the stairs. He found that he was cut off by the flames and knew of no way to get out of the building except through the front door. He made a dash through the flames and had nearly reached the door when he fell, overcome by smoke.

Policeman Beckett, who had turned in the alarm for the fire, rushed back to the building, and knowing that McHugh was inside, he ran into the hallway and stumbled over McHugh and Marden.

Since McHugh was appointed to the force, in 1898, he has established a record for bravery. He once rescued two men from drowning by plunging into the Harlem River, and has stopped several runaways.

REPUBLICAN TARIFF REFORM.

It shows how completely the sentiment of the business community relating to foreign trade has been demoralized by the long course of protective tariff treatment that the attitude of Gov. CUMMINS and the leading Republicans of the Northwest should be generally described as "bold." In reality it is timid.

The most that these advocates of reason in the tariff dare to ask from the Republican Convention is a declaration that some taxes are no longer needed and some too high. They present no statement as to the taxes they mean. They define no principle by which these taxes can be determined. They do not say what they will do if their policy is not adopted. They content themselves with vague and unmeaning complaint on a subject that is capable of perfectly clear statement, and as to which firm and effective action is quite possible. And for this faint squeak of discontent they are denounced by the protectionists as rebels and traitors and praised by themselves and their friends as bold innovators and reformers.

Suppose that some Republican of influence in his party should take upon himself to say that his party owes it to the country to declare that it will revise the tariff for the purpose of reducing the taxes on the material of manufactures to a revenue point—that is, that no such tax shall be so high as to check importation—that would be a precise and intelligible proposition. It would mark out a step in advance. It would show, should it be adopted, that the party was capable of progress. No leader has come anywhere near to such a proposition, and we do not think that any leader will. Why? Because it would bring on such a tightening of the purse strings, such a withdrawal of campaign contributions, that the politicians would be scared stiff. Apparently the only way in which the absurd and depressing tariff rule can be broken is by the union of the Democratic Party on the issue.

THE RESCUE OF THE POLICE.

The question that has occurred to many sympathetic observers of Gen. GREENE'S gallant and vigorous struggle to organize the police force on a basis of efficiency and decency is, of course, where he will get the material he needs. When he shifts or dismisses a man in the upper grades who has proved untrustworthy or incompetent, what better can he expect from any other man he may seek in the lower ranks who has been trained in the same school, subjected to the same temptations, liable to the same fears for the future, and forced to make the same choice between fidelity to duty and possible persecution by the evildoers who may have a hold on him? The force has been in a bad way so long, and the conspiracy against the law has gained such a grip on it in so many directions that this question is not to be answered lightly. When we recall the peculiar and powerful organization of the force under Tammany for the sale of immunity to law violators to the profit of the strongest men in the dominant party, it is natural to wonder how far Gen. GREENE will be able to go. The doubt may increase our admiration for his courage and for the resourcefulness he has thus far shown, but it emphasizes the tremendous difficulty of his task.

One thing he appears to be doing the effect of which may be far-reaching. He is steadily bringing to the front the younger men. He has done so in the two recent conspicuous cases of Inspector MCCLUSKY and Capt. O'CONNOR, the head of the Detective Department and the Captain of the "Tenderloin," and he seems to be making it a general policy so far as the circumstances admit. As the older men are withdrawn voluntarily and otherwise, their places will be filled by younger ones who give promise of satisfactory service. The change is important. If the newer appointees have ability and courage, if they are only negatively entangled with the vile "system," and if they have true professional ambition, their opportunities will be very great so long as the present Commissioner holds his office. The main difficulty in getting all the good from the change that ought to be attainable is the influence of the paralyzing fear that Tammany will return to power, and the "grafters" again be in the saddle.

It is at this point that the duty of every one of us citizens and voters of the great city becomes plain and definite. The rescue of the Police Department, with all that it implies in decency, justice, safety for the community, really lies to a great extent in our hands. Ultimately it lies wholly in our hands, since it will be for us to say whether Tammany shall or shall not come back. But we can also immediately exert a decisive influence. The entire police force, from the patrolman to the Inspectors, with the army of violators of the law are now intently studying public opinion, and it is we who make public opinion. There should be no mistaking what that opinion is. The present administration has made its mistakes, and some of them have been serious, some of them distressing. But even apart from the reform of the police, the balance as between what it has done and what Tammany would have done, and will do, if it get back, is creditable. The reform of the police, however, as it is now assured if we will accept it, is incalculably important. It would offset a balance that was otherwise discreditable. And every sane and honest voter in the city should make it clear to all who know him, that he will not see that immense reform put in peril.

ASSISTANT TREASURER PLIMLEY?

According to our Washington dispatches, the commission of Mr. WILLIAM PLIMLEY as Assistant Treasurer has not been delivered, although made out and signed by the President. It seems that Mr. ALDRICH, the Chairman of the Finance Committee, was not satisfied with the way in which Mr. PLIMLEY'S nomination was confirmed, there having been no action of the committee upon it, only a verbal individual assent to the request of Senator PLATT of New York to approve it, and had the confirmation recalled.

Mr. ALDRICH is reported as having said in executive session that it had been represented to him that the nomination was not regarded as conspicuously good by some of the bankers in this city, and that an inquiry would be desirable. Whether any effective opposition will be shown to the confirmation of Mr. PLIMLEY is doubtful. But it is not too much to say that an inquiry such as Mr. ALDRICH now proposes should have been made by or for the President before the nomination was submitted to the Senate. Had that been done, it is a fair inference that a clearer notion of Mr. PLIMLEY'S qualifications would have been obtained than appears to have been possessed when the nomination was determined on. It is possible that evidence would have developed that would have silenced all criticism, though what might be the source of such evidence we are at a loss at present to imagine. Our venerable Senator was more anxious that there should be no mishap in the confirmation than he was that there should be no misfit in the office.

THE WATERBURY STRIKE INJUNCTION.

The conditions in Waterbury as the direct and indirect result of the street-car strike having become intolerable, the Superior Court has interposed for the protection of the public interest by a far-reaching injunction to restrain disorder and violence and the improper use of "moral suasion." Naming seventeen labor organizations, their officers, and more than one hundred individual members, and directed against all whom it may concern, whether specifically named or not, it forbids any further interference with the operation of the street-car service of the Connecticut Railway and Lighting Company, efforts to induce its employés to leave its service, picketing or loitering in the streets for the purpose of interfering with such employés, and all forms of the boycott, whether of the company, its employés, local merchants, persons riding in the company's cars, or those having dealings with the company. In addition, the company has begun suits against the unions named in the injunction for damages in the sum of $20,000, and the individuals named are joined as defendants on the allegation that they have personally done some, at least, of the acts from which the damage has resulted. The matter thus assumes many of the aspects of the Taft Vale case, which went against the union that had become involved in the unlawful acts from which that corporation suffered so heavily. The funds in bank to the credit of the unions and of the individuals made defendants in these proceedings have been attached. This gives the proceedings an aspect which can be readily understood by all in interest, and makes it plain to the men who have maintained disorder in Waterbury for so many weeks that they must answer for the acts they committed or participated in. Criminal proceedings they are not in the least afraid of. Civil proceedings they have good reason to dread. For some of them both criminal and civil proceedings are their portion. To determine just what are the new features of this case as it stands would call for something more than a comparison of the terms of the Waterbury injunction with those issued in Ansonia, St. Louis, and Toledo, and in West Virginia in somewhat similar circumstances. The civil suits are also not without precedent, but in these decisions cannot soon be expected. Whether the injunction in all its features will stand or not is a matter of judgment likely to be much influenced by the point of view. Judge ELTON is a capable jurist of wide experience. The matter will be argued ably and conclusively on the first Tuesday in April, when the question of making it permanent will be considered.

It should begin to be evident to organized labor that the special and exceptional privileges and immunities it has claimed in the performance of acts involving a violation of the rights of others are no longer to be enjoyed without encountering resistance, and that to fight for a wrong is to invite inevitable defeat with more or less disastrous consequences. The courts have hesitated to interfere in what are popularly known as labor disputes, and such hesitation will continue. They are recognizing more and more clearly, however, the duty imposed upon them to protect society against crimes committed in the name of labor, and the conservative employment of the power of the injunction is about the only basis remaining for a reasonable hope that organized society will be able to defend itself against organized labor. The wage-earner is apt to forget that he is a citizen, and that he owes duties in that relation which will not permit him to seek personal or class advantage by lawless means. He must be made to understand that a conspiracy does not legalise acts which would be criminal in the individual. Organized labor seems to have great difficulty in understanding this. Injunctions may help it to do so by giving time for reflection.

We cannot resist the conclusion that for the conditions which for many weeks have existed in Waterbury the law-abiding people of that city are largely to blame. They have not acted with the promptness or vigor in demanding the enforcement of the law which their interests required, and have not held the municipal authorities to the measure of responsibility they would have felt had public opinion found a clearer and more emphatic expression. It is much easier to restrain and discourage lawlessness than to suppress it after it gains headway and becomes insolently bold by easy toleration.

FILTRATION FOR ITHACA.

As announced in our news columns, the first practical step toward giving Ithaca a satisfactory water supply has just been taken in the decision of the water company to build immediately a filtration plant on plans made by Mr. ALLEN HAZEN, an engineer of large and varied experience, but probably best known as the designer of the Albany filtration plant. The work will be undertaken immediately, and the company expects to have it in successful operation by June. This expectation can hardly be realised, but it is probable that it will be in operation by midsummer. The money will be advanced by Cornell University as an investment, on the security of bonds covering the water and gas plants of the city. The wisdom of this close identification of the university with the two local enterprises which are now somewhat unpopular, might be more open to question under other conditions than those which now exist in Ithaca. Whether it is wise here, in view of the best interests of the university, is a matter which the Trustees are perhaps better able to decide than others. However this may be, it will result in giving Ithaca an abundant supply of good water by the quickest and indeed only practicable method. There is every reason to believe that the university has satisfactory assurance that its investment is secure, whether the plan of municipal ownership is carried out or not. It has good legal advice—a fact which might well operate to check the enthusiasm of those who talk about seizing the water company's mains and doing other impossible things.

The work decided upon will be immediately carried out. It involves a dam thirty feet high to give an impounding reservoir which will hold two months' supply for the town and afford ample opportunity for the clarification of the waters of Six Mile Creek by sedimentation. The filter plant will combine the chemical and mechanical principles, and will represent the best results of experience in this and other countries. It will deliver 3,000,000 gallons per day of soft water 99.7 to 99.8 per cent. pure. The filtrate will pass into a well of half a million gallons capacity, from which the distributing mains will be filled. Buttermilk Creek will be abandoned as a source of supply—not because it is not of as good quality as the one depended upon, but because it is no longer needed. The lower levels will be supplied by gravity, the upper levels by pumping.

This settles the water problem of Ithaca on a very satisfactory basis. The plant will have vigilant and skillful management and will meet the requirement of President SCHURMAN for an ample and unimpeachable water supply before September. Meanwhile the popular interest in the driven well experiment seems to be subsiding. One well has been driven which flows a moderate quantity under the present conditions of soil saturation, but putting a fire engine on it with a suction of 2½ or 3 inches quickly lowered it five feet and produced an immediate effect upon another well at a distance of a few hundred yards. The whole subject of the practicability of wells as a local source of supply has been studied by qualified experts of the university and was dismissed a year or two ago as promising little. The enthusiasm for private subscriptions to the experimental fund has been adroitly stimulated by the representatives of commercial interests likely to be benefited, but it cannot long be sustained on the basis of results obtained or in sight, and within six months the people of Ithaca will be boasting that they have the best water in the State. If the demand for municipal ownership continues the means of gratifying it will be found in legal and orderly ways. Ithaca experience, past, present, and to come, is of interest to a great many interior cities and towns, and may be studied with profit.

WHY THIS DELAY?

On the 31st of December, at the close of his first year in office, the City Chamberlain, Dr. E. R. L. GOULD, requested the Civil Service Commission to include in the classified service all the positions in his office not so included. He did this because he was convinced by experience that the positions could satisfactorily be filled by examination under the rules, and also because he recognized the competency of the incumbents and had no desire to change them. All but one of them, it may be remarked, were in the office when Dr. GOULD came in. The request was a very proper one to make, and showed the Chamberlain's confidence in and fidelity to the principles of the merit system.

The City Commission promptly granted the request and passed a rule classifying the positions named by the Chamberlain on Jan. 7. It was in due course approved by the Mayor, and sent to the State Commission on the 27th of January for its approval, which is required to give the rule final effect. The State Commission has not decided in regard to it. It is reported unofficially that some opposition was made to the rule by the Democratic Commissioner, and that it is held for inquiry by him. If that be the case, the sooner he reports and the sooner the commission acts the better. It is little short of absurd that the request of an appointing officer to curtail his own discretion in the matter of appointments should not be granted without hesitation. The Constitution requires that all appointments such as those referred to shall be made by competitive examination when practicable. No better evidence that it is practicable could be had than the testimony of an official so efficient and exacting as the Chamberlain. The State Commission would do well to furbish up its information as to what the Constitution requires and act upon it.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Our declaration, in a recent discussion of the king's gambit, that the second player, "if he makes the safer and baser choice, can play, we suppose, pawn to king's fourth," has been characterized by the chess expert of The Rochester Post-Express as "a sad blunder." It certainly was a blunder, but as for its sadness—well, every chess player instantly corrected "king's fourth" by changing it to "queen's fourth" and placidly continued his perusal of our able and interesting remarks, while for other people "king's fourth" was just as good as "queen a fourth" would have been. So, all things considered, the blunder wasn't serious enough to be sad, and with a little effort we can forgive ourselves for making it—almost as easily, indeed, as we can forgive the Rochester critic for having himself said, in his very next sentence: "Of course pawn to king's fourth is black's second move, and he cannot make it again when white pushes out the gambit pawn." As the move mentioned is black's first, not his second, to the knowledge of everybody who has risen above checkers, perhaps the Rochesterian will join us in merrily henting the title or any other convenient method of showing implacable gayety, despite the occasional perpetration of an occasional mistake of this self-correcting sort. But there! we do not resent his chastening, so far from it are we that we are quite willing to accept—and give publicity to—his revelation of the fact that, in this king's gambit tournament, declination of the offered pawn is barred and that dissertations on different ways of doing it were therefore as "apropos de bottes" as of this king's gambit tournament. After such a display of humility as that he certainly ought to pardon us for refusing to be sad or even grumpy.

—Even in Germany and despite the existence there of extremely elastic laws against Majestätsbeleidigung—and the rest of the alphabet if the Kaiser chooses—once in a while a Berlin paper manages to be disrespectful in a way so ingenious that, while its wicked intention is obvious, tangible excuse for the infliction of punishment is lacking. A really beautiful achievement in this interesting field of endeavor must be credited to The Berlin Post, which introduces some curious comments upon the Kaiser as a critic of what is called "the higher criticism," with the lines from the speech of the Archbishop of CANTERBURY in "King Henry V.," beginning:

Hear him but reason in Divinity,
And, all-admiring, with an inward wish,
You would desire the King were made a prelate.

By its use of this adroitly selected quotation The Post evidently does more than intimate the belief that its dread-lord would make a better Bishop than Emperor, or, at least, would be less of a peril to the pence of mind of journalists and some others. And yet no offense can be taken to what seems to be an expression of fervent appreciation of the Kaiser's all-knowledge. Of course the enigmatic lines will be studied with suspicious attention by the guardians of the monarch's dignity, but they will waste their time. The irreverence is too well veiled to be clearly seen, and even a Prussian censor would hesitate to attempt to make a case out of a charming compliment.

—What effect the automobile will have upon the future of the horse is a question that has been learnedly discussed so many times, and confidently answered in so many ways, that to say anything new on the subject is extremely difficult. The Electrical Review, however, has managed to do just that in the course of an article in which, after denying the assertion of the horse-lovers that the automobile is a mere passing fad, and the prediction of the automobilists that the horse is doomed to speedy extinction, it suggests that, exactly as dogs have survived in undiminished numbers, despite the fact that not one in a hundred of them is of any practical utility, so the horse will survive the assumption of all his more important tasks by the new machines. He will have to adapt himself to the new conditions, however, as the dog has. Once most dogs or all of them were big; now the vast majority of them are small, as a pet animal must be for reasons both of convenience and economy. So The Electrical Review thinks that in the ages to come, when automobiles do all the hard work at present done by horses, the small breeds of the latter will be the only representatives of a now haughty and weighty tribe. In other words, our descendants will have only toy horses, to be pastured on the front lawn and kept in kennels instead of stables, if, indeed, they do not live in the houses of their loving owners. As for the charge that a man cannot talk to his automobile as he can to his horse, The Review laughs that idea to scorn, and advises those who hold it to go out with an automobilist some day and listen to what he says when the machinery gets out of order, and note carefully to what the conversation, lecture, or oration, is addressed.

—President WILBUR F. BERRY of the Kent's Hill Seminary in Portland, Me., has had to defend himself from attacks from several quarters because he not only accepted for the institution a legacy of $100,000 from the late FRANK JOHNS, the Portsmouth brewer, but also eulogized him to some extent in a speech delivered after Mr. JOHNS's death. President BERRY brought the matter up at a reunion of Kent's Hill graduates last week. As for the eulogy, he said: "My position relative to the election of FRANK JOHNS as a trustee of Kent's Hill Seminary has always been that he never ought to have been elected to the board. The Trustees did, however, elect him, after careful thought and deliberation. When Mr. JOHNS died, as President of the school paying the respect that is due any man holding a similar position, I called attention to the objections of the conference at the time of his election, and I also stated that Mr. JOHNS had been a business man whose word was as good as his bond." Then turning to the matter of the money, President BERRY presented a justification of his acceptance that others confronted with the same problem may find useful. "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof," he began, and added: "If money has strayed away from the Lord and comes back to us we will use it to His glory and for the benefit of mankind." Cynics will smile at this, but it is certainly adroit, and it serves the necessary purpose quite as well as did the simpler Roman excuse that "money has no smell" to reveal its origin.

HIGH LICENSE FEES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Gov. Odell's interview on the bill increasing the saloon tax has left me wondering whether he stopped to consider the tendency of his figures. If the operation of the present high license law reduced crime 40 per cent. in four years, it seems clear that all that is necessary to abolish it entirely, in the next four, is an increase of 150 per cent., which would bring our tax about to the rate charged in Boston, where they retain their police and prisons, presumably, for the sake of old associations. The Governor is to be reprehended if he fails to recommend to the Legislature such a practical suggestion and rests content with only partial achievement.

The difference in rate between the new and old license fees will probably be sufficient to put many saloons out of business, and our Prohibitionist-Democratic Attorney General will have a halcyon time enforcing the law and making adherents for his party. Thus history repeats itself and our politicians slowly develop into the "publicans" of old.

Whether Mr. Odell knows it or not, his bill will give an added life to illicit selling and will encourage the passing off on the consumer of a poorer article. The brewer will further dilute his beer and rush it with greater speed from the brewery to the saloon.

I am unable to say how many unlicensed drinking shops there are to-day in New York, but a canvass of two east side Assembly Districts revealed in the neighborhood of 250 illicit places where alcoholic drinks can be bought after proper introduction. There is absolutely no local reprobation of the traffic, and the police are supposed to derive much revenue from their knowledge of the places where the business is done.

It is impossible to awaken any moral sentiment in favor of an excise restriction, for there seems to be an instinctive feeling that if a vocation is not unlawful a man should be permitted to ply it without Government interference—or, to put it more tersely, an act which is not criminal per se cannot be made so by legislation, at least among the unlearned, who are unable to grasp the doctrine of the economic schools that a man has no rights except such as the State confers on him, and that, therefore, the Government can put an upset price on the "right" to run a grogshop.

BELIEF IN CHRIST.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

An article appears in your columns of to-day's paper under the headline of "Catholic Belief in Christ" that states the position of the Catholic "believers" and the Protestant "believers" as is. This belief idea has been the contention of centuries, and the cause of most of the wars on earth. Your Catholic correspondent declares that his belief will be "coterminous with time," and that "it is difficult to conceive how she is to perish." It is fair to presume that this same infallible belief is held by the Protestant. Both nothing but simple beliefs.

What are they? Facts? No, beliefs. Why are people afraid of natural facts, facts, and physical truths? Why, "belief" in something unknowable, absolutely beyond present human possibility of knowing. Would not people be as good as now, as selfish as now, as determined to exterminate or take advantage of those who dared to think independently, to think from the standpoint of fact as the premises of their logical conclusions? Has it not been the development of general education coupled with the development of gunpowder that has forced the "beliefs" to a more liberal basis and tolerance of different opinion? Who dares to cut off our head to-day simply because of belief or without belief? The honest man can say to-day without risk of his head and with impunity: I conclude that an unknown power more supreme than myself probably exists and has origin in immutable natural laws which govern the earth and solar systems. Beyond this fact I am ignorant, absolutely ignorant. How do you know more, Mr. Belief? Tell us any facts further and we are with you body and soul, if you ever saw a soul. Treat your neighbor as yourself has been found to be a very good rule of every-day working rule, and if this little rule could take the place of these ponderous non-logical somethings called "beliefs" every poor family would soon own an acre of ground, and the rich might be better off physically, while the non-taxpaying institutions would have a chance to pay their way for the benefit of the public treasury as the unfortunate who differs with the believer is now forced to do.

In other words the "beliefs" still insist that everybody should be, now, forced to pay taxes to support their particular ideas; otherwise, they would at once show the goodness and fairness of their doctrines by insisting that a law be passed taxing all churches as private property is taxed and equally as per valuation. Every person pays taxes in some form, therefore every one is forced to support those institutions now exempt from tax. Is this your boasted justice per doctrine of belief, and can it be assumed that this illustration and fact of injustice will ever remain unchanged? Facts are stubborn things. Enough of "belief."

CATHOLIC BELIEF IN CHRIST.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I, for one, feel grateful to Layman Stanislaus for his letter in your issue of to-day. Spurgeon, a well-known Protestant preacher in England, said twenty years ago, that "Protestant dissent" (he was an Anabaptist) was honeycombed with Unitarianism."

Let but that corporate reunion between the three great divisions of Christendom, (the Latin, the Greek, and the Anglican,) for which many of us, from each of those bodies, have prayed for many years, be accomplished, and the Protestant sects, comprising, all together, about one-tenth of Christendom, will be absorbed almost before they know it. Socinians and other infidels will then stand confessed for what they are, "denying the Lord that bought them." Holy Church will once more be one, and then "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

THE STABILITY OF PRINCIPLES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Although I am well aware of the fact that "hatred makes blind," I was still not a little astonished at the kind of "argument" offered in that paragraph of yesterday's "Topics of the Times" which undertakes to criticise rather haughtily Mr. Bryan's statement as to the stability of principles.

Mr. Bryan's exact words are as follows: "Principles do not change. What was right yesterday, last month, last year, ten years ago, is right to-day and will be right forever." To this his critic objects rather vehemently on the ground that "there are innumerable acts the rightness or wrongness of which depends upon circumstances, and circumstances change. * * *" It requires indeed a good deal of self-complacency on the part of a writer to dish up to his readers such a hackneyed commonplace without drawing the plain conclusion from it that, for this very reason, it is not permissible, in a discussion about the moral valuation of things, to separate the "act" from the circumstances connected with it—that, as far as the moral aspect of things is concerned, the outward act and the circumstances influencing it are an inseparable unit.

Does your critic want to make his readers believe that Mr. Bryan's words were, "Acts do not change; acts are either right or wrong, no matter under what circumstances they were or are done"? What he did say is that principles, which form the standard by which human actions are measured, are invariable, and therefore when applied to like acts done under like circumstances must produce a like moral estimate of them, no matter at what time they were done. In other words: The time of execution is not one of the circumstances that form an integral part of an act, and consequently the time of execution must not influence our moral estimate of the act.

To use the misplaced example of your critic: The blowing up of a house is in itself an action not susceptible of moral valuation—it cannot be pronounced either right or wrong until we know, for instance, that it was done for the purpose of stopping a conflagration, and then, according to Mr. Bryan, our estimate of such an action for such a purpose must be the same, no matter when it was, is, or will be done. It will require a stronger philosopher and logician than the writer of your paragraph to shake that assertion. Nor are such petty malices as the one at the end of the "argument" likely to swell the "majority" referred to by Mr. Bryan's critic. N. W. NAGEL.

ARCHITECTS AND STRUCTURAL ENGINEERS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It was with keen pleasure that I read the confessions of an architect, narrated under the heading "Methods of the Modern Architect," on Page 32 of your issue of Sunday, March 1, 1903.

As this gentleman makes the statement that "nearly every old firm of architects in the city is looking out for some young fellow who is both an architectural engineer and a climber," I am anxious to learn from him the names of some of these architectural firms to which he refers.

The firm of which the writer is a member has been doing business for seven years here in New York. It was organized primarily to supply this supposed need of the old-time architectural firms for structural engineers, and especially to relieve them of the supervision of the steel construction and the foundation work. Instead, however, of finding a large number of architects who were looking for help in this direction, we found almost none. Very few were willing even to admit that there was anything unusual in the modern construction which their own office force was not perfectly competent to handle.

We have had in our employ at different times some of the best inspectors to be obtained anywhere, and they were men to whom climbing was almost a second nature. Our prices have been made as reasonable as was consistent with a fair margin of profit, and are much lower than the cost would be to the architect who should try to have the same work done by an engineer in his own employ, unless he had several pieces of engineering work going on at the same time. As for accuracy and care, we have a reputation which is too good to lose, as was evidently not the case with your correspondent, the architect's youthful partner, who accepted fees for overlooking bad workmanship or faulty material. We have several buildings to our credit, not only here in New York, but elsewhere, and I am thankful to say, none to our discredit. Those whom we serve once usually return a second and a third time.

Yet in the face of this showing our clients have been mostly owners and builders rather than architects; and thus it happens that we are compelled by the force of circumstances to encroach upon the architect's field itself to the extent of furnishing complete plans, specifications, and supervision for certain classes of heavy construction requiring almost no ornate features either inside or out.

The writer regrets that this is so, and would prefer to confine his energies to engineering strictly; but the change has been gradually forced upon us as the only alternative, in order to keep in the business at all. Nor does our experience differ from that of many other structural engineers.

Does it not seem, therefore, that the architects as a class have been pursuing a rather short-sighted policy? In not recognising the engineer's work as distinct from their own and being willing to pay a fair price for it, architects are now witnessing the gradual concentration of all the "big" work in the hands of a few firms where the highest order of engineering and architectural efficiency is combined; and have not the architects to thank themselves that this is so?

LANDS THAT MAY BE FLOODED.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Referring to your note under heading of "Topics of the Times" printed in your issue of the 3d inst. regarding the choice of people who build houses in locations where they are liable to be swept away by the periodical rising of the waters of rivers, I beg to say that you seem to overlook the most important consideration in these matters.

The fact is that no one can comment fully and completely on any such phenomenon as this unless he has first seen to it that he is thoroughly grounded in the principles of the land question. Had the writer of the item referred to been so grounded he would have recognised the impelling cause of the choice of such locations. It is simply a matter of rent or of purchase price—which is capitalised rent. If he will look into the question he will find that locations, otherwise the same but differing from each other in point of liability of being flooded, have a proportionate rental or purchase value, and that any disadvantage attached to any given location will always be shown in the lower rental or purchase price.

He will find also that if a given location has been proved by experience to be subject to a periodical overflow, and that if this section is then protected by dykes or otherwise from such overflow, the result will be an increase of rental values and of the purchase price. In the end, it will not, however, affect the value of the buildings nor of anything produced by labor upon such land. If the single tax were in force men would pay for their use and occupancy of land its annual rental value, and if then the Government erected dykes to protect land from overflow the Government would be paid for such work by the increased rental values of the land so protected.

No one not benefited by the improvement would be required to pay for any part of the expense of improvement, either directly or indirectly. But on the contrary those benefited would pay and in direct proportion to benefits received. So with all other improvements made by municipal, State, or general Governments and which might affect the utilized value of land. The improvements would be paid for by those benefited, i. e., the users of the improved sites, and all such matters would thus automatically adjust themselves.

AGRARIAN SOCIALISM.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On Page 27 of your paper of March 8, Mr. Charles A. Downes says that Mr. Louis F. Post is not a Socialist, but "a consistent follower of Henry George, hence an individualist." Again he says: "In fact, I have never met a refutation of the doctrine of Henry George." I beg leave to say that I have not only met, but have carefully read at least two such refutations. I will point them out.

One is contained in a small book entitled "Land and Its Rent," (1883,) by Francis A. Walker, who at the time of his death, in January, 1897, was President of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The argument here is clear and conclusive, and it completely demolishes the system of George, and exposes its sophistry and absurdity.

The other refutation fills a lengthy chapter in the book entitled "Contemporary Socialism," by John Rae, a Scotchman. As is well said elsewhere, "the analysis here given undermines the very foundations on which George's structure is built, and the whole fabric dissolves before our eyes." Mr. Rae in his last edition, of 1901, gives a heading to his chapter on this subject that well answers the purpose of a definition. He entitles the chapter: "The Agrarian Socialism of Henry George." This is apt and accurate. Henry Georgeism, if I may so call it, is the scientific socialism or collectivism of Karl Marx, applied solely to the land. Hence it is agrarian socialism. It aims at the destruction of all private property in land by converting it into public property. The land is to be socialized. That is, individual ownership of it is to be crushed out, and the ownership of it is by society, in other words by the State of the government, is to be substituted in its place. The individual will be nothing and nobody, and society at large with government at its instrument, will be everything and everybody. There will be no rent to pay by anybody, and all tenants and occupiers of land, will be virtuous and happy.

The modus operandi by which this is to be accomplished, will be somewhat as follows: Tax the land. Over-tax it, and keep on taxing it, and then, when the time comes, seize it for the unpaid taxes and confiscate it, sell it out at auction, and let the government buy it in and take the legal title for the benefit of all the people alike, to be held and enjoyed by them in common on a footing of perfect social equality.

So far as I can see, this will be the agrarian socialism of Henry George, Louis F. Post, and Charles A. Downes.

THE OLD JUMEL MANSION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It appears that the old Jumel mansion, located in the upper section of our city, and for many years an interesting memorial to eighteenth, is about passing into other hands under foreclosure of mortgage proceedings, and that strenuous efforts are being made by the Daughters of the American Revolution for the perpetuation of this famous landmark. It was here that Aaron Burr, in many respects one of the most remarkable personalities this country has produced, passed a portion of his old age. But a short time since Trautmore's Tavern, hallowed by some of the most illustrious memories of the American Revolution, passed under the guardian care of this same organization. I discuss this subject because it ought to appeal with a good deal of enthusiasm to every true American.

This city to-day boasts of but few such historical landmarks. One by one they have been swept away. It seems to be a utilitarian age. Iconoclasm has invaded the Anglo-Saxon blood. A gross materialism symbolizes itself in the modern skyscraper, and is largely responsible for the decay of a proper reverential regard for the memorials of a heroic past. Why, the modern Goths and Vandals attempted to deface the Palisades, one of the grandest scenic attractions of our fair-famed Hudson River! A different condition of things obtains in Europe. The Old World teems with objective points of historical interest. The charm of travel there consists in the facilities for reminiscent wanderings. All these historical associations awaken a liberal education. They inspire one with the heroism, the patriotism, the religious enthusiasm that once stirred the human soul.

I submit, as a lover of history, that these noble efforts of the Daughters of the American Revolution should be encouraged and commended.

CONDITIONS IN ITHACA.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

My son attended school at Ithaca, and is now ill in Baltimore with typhoid fever contracted in Ithaca. He said as soon as he came home, and before he was taken desperately ill, that there was considerable fever last year in Ithaca and other cases of sickness, and for the size of the place that those who were sick far outnumbered those who were well. He also said (which carries out the remark made in one of Mr. J. C. Bayles's articles) that there were other causes for the fever than the water, but that so far they had not been able to find out what these causes were, or if they had he did not know of it.

I am happy to say that I think my son is now past the danger point and will recover, but the doctor says that he has a straight out-and-out case of typhoid fever with very low tendencies, and hard to break up.

Knowing the condition of affairs at Ithaca, I should think it would be the best policy to close the university and other boarding schools and send the students home, and not have them come back until this fever and kindred troubles are fully under control.

MORTGAGE TAX BILL.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of this date I see how pleased Gov. Odell is with the action of the Republican caucus in agreeing to the four-mill mortgage tax bill. I have wondered at the intense interest of the Governor in the matter, but, as the proceeds are to be divided between the city and the State, and the share of the State is estimated to amount to $6,000,000, it is not very hard to explain the cause of his interest.

Now let us look for a moment and see where the money is to come from. Is it to be collected from any wealthy people who try to evade their taxes? No! Is it to be collected from corporations, banks, personal mortgagees? Ostensibly, yes; in reality, no! They will not pay one cent of it. I do not think the Governor expects them to.

In all the cities of this State there are certain classes of people, whom all respect, who are law abiding and orderly, and who, by their frugality, have founded homes for themselves and families. These people represent the thinking, intelligent majority of the country, and are really of the class that constitute the large Republican majorities. These people, the greater number of which have some mortgage on their homes, pay their city and State taxes on property that is generally overvalued, and pay the mortgagee's insurance in advance. Take Brooklyn, for instance. In that small office which there were sixty mortgages to be called in, in case the bill passed, and that all renewals would be made at a higher rate. Now it is the first part of this information that astounds one. If that one little office has sixty mortgages to pay off how many millions will it mean throughout the State?

Probably not one man in ten can take up his mortgage at short notice, and he will be compelled to lose his equity, which may be his all. It means more hardship and quiet suffering, and a worse condition of affairs than the evictions in Ireland, for it strikes unerringly at the best class of people a community has, and sets class and strikes with sure results. And for what? That the State may get $6,000,000 at a cost of $6,000,000 to the individual. Shame on such legislation! Let every honest, upright citizen arise and condemn it, and such a state party again.

THE RADIATOR.

From The Washington Star.

Oh, the weary radiator; it has toiled all Winter through;
We nourished it with soft coal and with beards and barrels, too;
We utterly forgot it when it did its duty well;
When it failed, our indignation knew no possible to tell.

We were often fain to chide it as a source of much distress
When it came to raise a racket, for it was its loudness;
We begrudged it all amusement and thought it very wrong
For it to find a little laugh and make a song.

How long will have to meet the radiator's usual lot;
The Spring will gently steal on it and then 'twill be forgot.
And folks who turn to cheering speak in accents rude
About the room it takes. And not a man gratitude!

STATE REGENTS DEFENDED

Dr. Roosa's Argument in Support of Their Measure.

Medical Instructors and Physicians to Enter the Controversy That Is Pending Before the Legislature.

The fight that is in progress before the Legislature over the proposition for unification of the educational system of the State, in the opinion of men identified with the higher educational institutions, promises results of vastly more importance than the matter of the survival in authority of one or the other of the two bodies that at present divide responsibility for the conduct of schools and colleges and allied methods of public instruction. With this view of the question, and acting on expressions showing practical unanimity in favor of the bill offered with the approval of the Regents of the University of the State of New York, it is asserted that medical instructors and physicians generally will add a new influence to the controversy by concerted action before the fight goes much further.

A definite plan has not been adopted yet, but Faculty members and Governors of medical colleges, it is said, have been preparing for a showing of popular strength in opposition to the supporters of the Superintendent of Public Instruction, among whom politicians anxious to preserve all existing patronage are said to be the strongest and most active. The medical advocates of the Regents' bill claim that about the same unanimity exists among the instructors in other advanced institutions, notably in the law schools.

Dr. D. R. St. John Roosa, a stanch supporter of the non-political Board of Regents, as opposed to the system represented by the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, is one of those who regard the plan of unification under the Regents as a step toward the perfection of educational methods.

"It seems to me," Dr. Roosa said yesterday, "that here is the chance for New York to establish a symmetrical and therefore powerful system of public education. New York is, and for a long time has been, in the lead in educational matters, methods adopted first in New York having been taken up not only in this country, but abroad. In both medical and legal instruction the State has been first to raise the standard of education and qualification. In medicine one result has been to put the practice in the State in the forefront. The non-political administration of educational affairs under the Board of Regents gave the best possible opportunity for advance in both science and art, and in memory of the two former men of that body I can have but one view of the plan to put the Regents in charge of all educational matters in the State.

POLITICAL INTERFERENCE.

The first idea of course is to put educational matters under the governmental supervision of a single body, but another matter of quite as great importance is to relieve that supervision from all possibility of political interference, if the best results are to be obtained. I believe it might be possible, but it is hardly probable, that an official depending on political power or the influence of politicians to remain in office would give his best efforts to his work as an educator. The best hope for a perfect system is to remove the Department of Public Education entirely beyond the reach of politics. The Regents of the University of New York have made a long and honorable record, and I regard any effort to curtail the powers of administration of that body as distinctly harmful, while any legislation that would abolish the board, in favor of another directly under the control of politics, and necessarily involving constant changes of officials, would be retrogression of a deplorable nature. There should never have been more than one head in charge of educational affairs, for the creation of a second authority, I am satisfied, encroached on the spirit, if not the letter, of the act creating the University of the State of New York. The Board of Regents has endured since about the time that the Constitution was adopted, and its record has been as spotless as the body has been dignified, partly because of the high character and ability of the men who have served on it, and partly because of its absolute freedom from the influence of politics.

The good that has been accomplished by the Regents in the past stands in testimony of the character of the men who have been identified with its work, and should make argument for continuing the institution on even broader lines. With all educational matters under its supervision it would be a matter of time only before friction in the management and methods of public instruction to be reached. Under the direction of the Regents New York has raised the standard in the practice of law and medicine steadily and swiftly, and in every advance has followed by other States and other countries. Unification of the educational system with the Regents still in control, under a non-partisan and non-political board, would be just one more step forward. It would be unnatural to expect an official dependent on the result of a political campaign for the friendship of politicians to give the same impartial attention to his educational work that might be expected from another educator, who knew he was free from political interference, and felt he was dependent only on the results of his work. Aside from that, the frequent changes that must result from the shifting of political power would cause interference with educational institutions in a way that would be impossible under the methods of the Board of Regents, where merit and ability to perform the duties of the office would insure continuance in office.

THE REGENTS' BILL.

"Against the political supervision of educational matters I am compelled to say that even Tweed did not interfere in matters that were of vital importance to the public, as witness his retention in power of the engineers in charge of the great works of his time, notably the water system. Nothing could be of more importance than public instruction, so why cannot politicians keep their hands off? The bill proposed by the Regents will make no changes that will in the least interfere with the efficacy of the school system. It simply will put a single body in control of all methods of public instruction, from the primary schools to the higher institutions of learning, the established system to remain with all its staff of instructors. The only changes that would be made would come when experience showed that there was opportunity to improve on old methods. The Regents would have no more difficulty in the management of the entire educational system than they have in managing the higher institutions at present, for it is not the purpose of the proposed law to make the board anything other than it is at present—a supervising and administrative body, aided by a paid staff of competent officials.

"As in the matter of employes I am in favor of a system that would give employment for life or during good behavior as a means of securing competent instructors and officials, and I am also in favor of a system of pensions for employes who may spend the best years of their lives as instructors in public institutions. There is no call for change in the method of appointing members of the Board of Regents—appointment by the Governor, with the approval of the Senate. The system is such that there seems no future danger that any but the best men, and those scientifically qualified will ever be chosen to serve on the Board of Regents of the University of the State of New York.

"I am convinced that the Board of Regents, with undivided authority in educational matters as provided for in the bill drawn as the result of their conference, and presented in the Legislature by Frederick D. Stevens, would in the course of a very short time give New York the best system of general public education that ever has been devised, and that the passage of the bill will advance immeasurably the cause of education."

The measure known as the Regents' bill is one of seven now before the Legislature, and is the only one that has the approval of the officers of the institutions of higher education. The other bills variously provide for abolishing the Board of Regents of the University of the State of New York, the powers of the Regents then to be vested in the Superintendent of Public Instruction, a salaried officer appointed by the Governor.

NORDICA SINGS IN CONCERT.

Sunday Night Season at the Opera House Closes with Verdi's Requiem Mass.

The great audience that left the Metropolitan Opera House last night after a rendition of Verdi's impressive Requiem Mass had their delight over the performance tinctured with regret, because the Sunday night concert season was closed. Take it all in all, the concerts this season have been a source of intense satisfaction to those who like to close their day of rest by listening to really good music. While a few of the concerts have been great disappointments, owing to the disposition of certain artists either to become "indisposed" or to sing under the misapprehension that anything was good enough for "a Sunday night crowd," yet the average has been good.

With Mr. Mancinelli conducting, with Mmes. Nordica and Schumann-Heink, and Messrs. Saligmac and Journet as soloists, and with the entire Opera House chorus in support, last night's rendition of the mass was a brilliant climax for the season. Mmes. Nordica and Schumann-Heink are unexcelled as singers of religious music such as is found in this composition. They were heard to the very best advantage last night, and the audience rewarded them with unstinted applause. Messrs. Saligmac and Journet are not at their best in such music, yet last night they were more than satisfactory.

To the work of the chorus and the orchestra great credit is due. The chorus especially seems to enter with great zest into the work on such an occasion as was that of last evening.

Must Not Produce "Mary of Magdala."

BERLIN, March 15.—The theatrical censorship recently refused to permit Paul Heyse's play, "Mary of Magdala," to be produced in Berlin, whereupon the Goethe Bund, with Sudermann, Ludwig Fulda, and Prof. Mommsen as leaders decided to produce the play in private before an invited audience. Herr Sudermann, however, has just published correspondence with the Police President, in which the latter forbids the private production of the play.

SWEDISH FAMINE BENEFIT.

Mme. Schumann-Heink and Mr. Eimbad Sing at Concert Arranged by Gunnar Wennerberg Association.

Carnegie Hall was crowded yesterday afternoon at the concert for the benefit of the famine-stricken population of Northern Sweden. The concert was given under the auspices of the Gunnar Wennerberg Memorial Association, which was formed about one year ago to keep green the memory of the Swedish poet and composer, and with the co-operation of all the Swedish churches and organizations in the greater city.

The concert, while only part of a general scheme of relief, will prove more fruitful of financial results than anything as yet done in that direction. All the seats had been sold several days ago, and at least 500 persons were turned away yesterday for the lack of standing room. The response from artists who volunteered their services in the good cause made it possible for the committee having the arrangements in hand to make the occasion enjoyable to the great audience.

Among those who volunteered were Mme. Schumann-Heink and Johannes Elmblad of the Maurice Grau Opera Company. Both received a great ovation from the audience. Mme. Schumann-Heink sang Schubert's "Die Allmacht," and as a da capo number a tuneful German ballad. Mr. Elmblad sang Björgren's "Bergmanden," with words by Henrik Ibsen; Schumann's "Pa Vandring" and "Die Beide Grenadieren," and some Swedish folk-songs.

Miss Martina Johnstone, the violinist, rendered the "Preislied" from Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" and a largo by Handel. Miss Rebecca McKenzie sang as soprano solos "L'abbandonar," the aria from Gounod's "Merlila," "Norwegian Echo Song," and "Rida Ranka," a pretty Swedish lullaby, with music by Ekenberg. Prof. John T. Erickson at the organ rendered Wagner's war march from "Rienzi" and an overture by Rossini.

Adolf Dahm-Petersen sang Kjerulf's "Good Morning" and a composition by Grieg as baritone solos. Kjerulf's beautiful "Bridal in Hardanger" was rendered by a male chorus from the Swedish Glee Club of Brooklyn and the singing societies Lyran and Orpheus.

Two of the Psalms of David, with the music by Gunnar Wennerberg, were rendered by the Gunnar Wennerberg Memorial Chorus, under the leadership of Dr. Arvid Akerfelt. The chorus made the following contributions to the programme:

Psalm LXXXIV., "Min sjal langtar och trangtar".....Gunnar Wennerberg
("My Soul Longeth.")
Soloist: Mr. Adolf Dahm-Petersen.
Psalm CL., "Lofver Gud i hans helgedom".....Wennerberg
("Praise God in His Sanctuary.")
Chorus a Capella, (a) "Stilla Sluggor".....
.....E. G. Geijer
(b) "En Sommarafton".....
.....A. F. Lindblad

It is estimated that about $1,500 was realised through the concert, all of which will be transmitted to the Relief Committee in Sweden.

BEAT THE OIL TRUST.

Japanese Companies Making Money While the Standard's Operations in Their Country Do Not Pay.

Special to The New York Times.

TACOMA, Washington, March 15.—According to Yokohama advices the Standard Oil Company is losing money by its oil refining operations in Japan, while its native competitors are making money. Of three companies engaged in refining petroleum in the oil fields of Japan, one is controlled by the Standard Oil Trust, being known as the International Oil Company.

At their last half-yearly meetings two native companies declared dividends respectively of 40 and 20 per cent. Though backed by unlimited capital and managed by American experts, the International Company has paid no dividends after three years of operation, so far as records in Japan show. The Japanese consider this strange, inasmuch as it possesses the largest and best-equipped refinery in the field. Japanese companies apparently pay high prices for crude oil, and thus fix prices which the Standard must pay.

The explanation of the situation is believed to be that the native companies have manipulated the crude oil market in such a manner that they secure inside prices, while establishing nominal charges that become very real to their American rival. The employment of American Superintendents by the International Company hurts the pride of the Japanese and is possibly a factor in the situation.

MR. PLIMLEY'S NOMINATION.

It May Come Up Again in the Senate To-day—Mr. Plimley in Washington.

WASHINGTON, March 15.—The expectation is that the nomination of William Plimley to be Assistant Treasurer of the United States at New York will come up again for consideration in the Senate tomorrow. Senator Aldrich, who made a request for reconsideration of the nomination after Mr. Plimley had been confirmed, was not ready to announce to-night whether he will press the motion for a reconsideration.

Mr. Plimley arrived in Washington to-night and had a conference with Senator Platt of New York, who also was at the White House to see the President in regard to the matter.

CITY LIGHTING PLANT SITE.

Col. Robert Grier Monroe, Commissioner of Street Lighting, accompanied by Charles F. Lacomb, the Engineer of Surface Construction; Prof. George F. Seaver, a consulting engineer, and E. F. Hutchinson, an electrical expert, went yesterday to Blackwell's Island to look over the ground with a view to the possible establishment there of a municipal electric lighting plant.

On his return Col. Monroe said that he was very much pleased with the inspection and thought the island an excellent site for a plant if the city should decide to erect one.

The Board of Estimate and Apportionment made an appropriation of $2,000 last Friday to carry on an investigation of the advisability of establishing a municipal plant.

Dr. A. W. Church's Will.

Dr. A. W. Church, who formerly lived at Watertown, N. J., but who for a year past had been living, but not practicing, in Jersey City, died in St. Francis's Hospital there on Friday. Shortly before dying he made a will leaving $20,000 to 6 places and a similar amount to a sister, both living at Ottawa, Canada. The rest of his estate he bequeathed to William H. Rees, a lawyer, of Jersey City. The estate is said to be worth about $100,000. Mr. Rees has taken the body to Canada.

GREATER COOPER UNION

Prophecy Made at People's Institute Fifth Anniversary.

Charles Sprague Smith Would Have Public Men Appear and Tell How Far They Have Fulfilled Pledges.

Cooper Union was crowded last night on the occasion of the fifth anniversary of the People's Institute. In the course of his remarks Charles Sprague Smith prophesied that there would be a new Cooper Union as large as Madison Square Garden. He did not announce any plans looking to the establishment of such an auditorium, but when his hearers laughed at the enthusiasm of what he termed his "vision" he told them that they need not laugh, as it was bound to be a reality.

"My idea," he said, "is to lift and broaden the grand work of this Cooper Union. I want to see this great home which has done so much for mankind rise and rise a thousand times greater and stronger and a thousand times more beautiful. I wanted to see it greater than it is, though already it is the greatest hall in the world.

"We are going to have this new Cooper Union, and it is going to be larger than Madison Square Garden. We hope to have a big fund behind it, too, which will enable us to have an organ and a choir. We will have a gymnasium and large and airy lecture rooms. We are going to have a hall large enough to seat 5,000 to 6,000 persons. It is all a dream, but—"

His audience laughed heartily, but, not minding the interruption, he went on:

"Don't doubt it. Don't doubt it. It is coming, and coming soon. Just you wait. I don't think it will be for very long."

He was cheered to the echo by nearly 2,000 voices.

Robert Fulton Cutting, the Chairman of the meeting said, in part:

"You all know that the People's Institute was established by a few men of education whose hearts were sad that their opportunities were not shared by others. They believed in their fellowmen. There were those who did not share in that optimism and thought that it might be a success so long as it proved a novelty. The hopes of the optimists were rewarded.

"Among the efforts of this Institute has been the effort to make the employers believe in the employe and the employe in his employer. We have realized that there are noble men among both the capitalists and the laborers, and we are trying to make them understand that they must know one another."

Charles Sprague Smith, the Director of the People's Institute, had a hard time to begin his talk, as his hearers made it an occasion to applaud and cheer for some minutes. Prof. Smith said in part:

"About a century ago there was a great social upheaval and revolution, and it caused a great deal of bloodshed on the way. Vast estates were divided among the people, giving to France a noble heritage. The giant of democracy is again awakening. He is not so rough and uncouth. There is a larger intelligence in his eye, and he has himself under better control. His is the slow but confident step that shall lead to the rule of the democracy. In this century we are going to experiment largely with real democratic government. The place is America. The time is the dawn of the new century.

"Another municipal election is upon us and the politicians will tell you from the platform what they will do for you if you shall give them your suffrage. Say to them that you will not support them with your vote unless they promise you that they will return here now and then to let you know in how far they have fulfilled their pledges to you. Think what this would mean if it should become a National custom."

J. G. Phelps Stokes also spoke.

OLD CHURCH CELEBRATES.

Ninety-seventh Anniversary of the South Second Street M. E. Congregation in Williamsburg.

The ninety-seventh anniversary of the South Second Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Williamsburg, was celebrated yesterday with special services, which are to be continued until Friday evening. The interior of the building was decorated with ferns and potted plants, and the services were largely attended.

At the morning service the Rev. Dr. George P. Mains preached the sermon. The Sunday school exercises were attended by the children of the South Third Street Industrial Home, who number more than 300. At the evening service the Rev. Dr. Grant preached the sermon.

This evening the Rev. Dr. David Downey will deliver an address; to-morrow evening the Rev. Dr. L. Watson Hannah will speak; on Wednesday evening the Rev. Dr. Abram S. Kavanagh will speak, and on Friday evening the Rev. Dr. O. P. Bartholow will lecture.

From the church's congregation St. John's Methodist Episcopal Church Society, the South Third Street Methodist Episcopal Church Society, the Central Methodist Episcopal Church Society, the Bushwick Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church Society, and the North Fifth Street Methodist Episcopal Church Society were organized. The pastor of the church is the Rev. Frederick Saunder.

TO VISIT NEW YORK SLUMS.

The Rev. H. B. Chapman of London Will Also Conduct a Series of Missions.

The Rev. H. B. Chapman, vicar of St. Luke's, Camberwell, London, England, preached yesterday morning to a large audience in the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street. Dr. Chapman has spent a large portion of his life working in the London slums and among the poorer classes. During his stay in New York he will investigate the conditions of the poor, and at a later date speak on the difference of New York and London poverty-stricken classes.

Dr. Chapman has been secured by Old Trinity to conduct a series of missions during Lent, and will speak at various churches throughout the city during the next few weeks.

In the course of his sermon yesterday he said:

"Never mind how expensive your sympathies are, but go ahead and develop your heart. Be men of sorrow and acquainted with grief. Small blame to a man who is tempted to go to the devil when no one will go to him in his loneliness and failure with a helping hand. We Christians are called upon to help the lonely men who are living in garrets and walking the streets, not knowing where their next meal is coming from. Don't cover sin with flowers, but go in humbleness to sinners and take their hand in sympathy. Go to the drunkard as a brother."

UNION OF CHURCHES.

Propositions for the Coming Together of Presbyterian and Dutch Reformed Organizations.

The Reformed Dutch Church, the oldest in New York, has been notified by an influential element of the Presbyterian Church South that that body will make overtures toward organic union. The news has not caused wholesale rejoicing by the Dutch Church, especially the Collegiate Church, that, next to Trinity Episcopal, is the richest church in America. The Southern Presbyterians have not taken steps to unite with Presbyterians North because of the change in the Westminster Confession that was made in this city last year. On the other hand, the Cumberland Presbyterians, meeting within six weeks, will make overtures to the Presbyterians North for organic union because the latter did change the Confession.

There is an unusual movement toward union among Presbyterians and their allies, the Reformed Dutch and German branches, and it is emphasized by overtures, to be issued this spring, from United Presbyterians, Associate Reformed, and several other smaller Presbyterian organizations that have congregations in this city, asking for one General Assembly to represent all Presbyterian bodies, each body to be permitted to retain its name and manage its missionary and other internal affairs. The tendency toward union, it is said, meets with the sympathy of the large Presbyterian body, that of the North.

All of these Presbyterian and Reformed bodies are to hold a meeting in this city early next month, and President Roosevelt will come here to address them. He will go also to Lexington, Va., to speak before the General Assembly of the Presbyterian South, who are to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of Presbyterian home missions.

PLAN TO DIVIDE A DIOCESE.

Scheme to Make the Bronx the See City of a New Jurisdiction Said to Have Bishop Potter's Approval.

Announcement has been made of a plan for the division of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York, which is understood to have the approval of Bishop Potter. The diocese comprises at present the three Boroughs of Richmond, Manhattan, and the Bronx of New York City, the Counties of Westchester, Putnam, and Dutchess, lying on the east side of the Hudson River, and the Counties of Rockland, Orange, Sullivan, and Ulster, lying on the west side.

The division proposed is the creation of a new jurisdiction, with the Borough of the Bronx as its see city, and comprising for the rest of it the Counties of Westchester, Putnam, and Dutchess lying on the east side of the Hudson. The other jurisdiction would keep Manhattan as the see city, and comprise Richmond on the south and the Counties of Rockland, Orange, Sullivan, and Ulster on the west of the river. Before such division could be made, it is said that it would be necessary to change the general law of the Episcopal Church forbidding the division of a city.

The advantages of such manner of division are set down as follows: 1. The Borough of the Bronx already contains a population of 240,000, and within a very few years will contain 500,000. This is a see city larger than that of all but a very few bishoprics in the whole country. Besides the forty-one square miles of the Bronx already contain twenty-four parishes and missions. The new jurisdiction would outrank in number of communicants fully sixty of the eighty jurisdictions into which the country is divided. Some opposition to this plan might come from Poughkeepsie, which is anxious to be made a see city, but the arguments against Poughkeepsie and in favor of Bronx Borough are considered strong, the chief argument being that of transportation.

By such division Bishop Potter would have the country section, without which he has said he feared a Bishop of New York might become a mere cockney, insufferable and intolerable. The plan, not of division but of the manner of it, if division be decided upon, is said to have originated from the Rev. Dr. Thomas R. Harris, Secretary of the Standing Committee, and Secretary of the Diocese.

Another measure New York churchmen are said to favor asking the General Convention to grant is permission to elect suffragan Bishops. This would necessitate the repeal of a canon prohibiting their election.

BOTANICAL GARDEN'S FLORAL BEAUTIES.

Rare Plants in Bloom in the Conservatories in Bronx Park—Oddities of the Collection.

The first breath of Spring seems to have been felt, even by the many rare and beautiful plants protected as much as possible from outside influences by the great domes and glazed roofs of the range of conservatories in the New York Botanical Garden in Bronx Park, and many of the finest specimens there exhibited are now at their best. George V. Nash, head gardener, has called attention to several of the most notable examples in an article which will appear in this month's number of The Journal of the Garden.

First in the list by reason of its grace and beauty is a palm, native of the Seychelles Islands. The specimen exhibited in the palm house is now seventeen feet in height, with great featherlike leaves, which has given rise to a legend among the natives as to its origin.

They say that shortly after the Creation a great bird left the earth in search of a brighter land and flew to the sun at such great speed that a feather was cast from its wing. It returned surprised to earth after many ages spent in space. It fell on one of the island group and there rooted and increased and renewed its youth from year to year in the guise of this beautiful palm.

In the Botanical Garden the palm when first received, of course a tiny plant, not known as a palm, has blossomed under cultivation, and it is now preparing to blossom for the third time. The horny sheath which incloses the inflorescence has formed, and it is about to open and display its mass of yellow flowers.

In the house, one of the cycadaceae, a plant nearer akin to the ferns than palms, is in fruit. This fruit is a yellow cone eighteen inches in height, rising out of a mass of long fernlike leaves. It is commonly known as the golden-fruited Kaffir bread, and the natives use the heart of the plant as food.

Another interesting plant is a chocolate tree in fruit. The fruit looks like a small muskmelon, and it contains more than seventy-five beans. A peculiarity of the plant is that flowers and fruit grow only on the trunk of the tree and from the base of the main branches. There are five specimens of the plant in the conservatories and all have blossomed, but only one has produced fruit.

Near it is a representative of America's colony in the Philippines, a handsome plant bearing a profusion of pink flowers in panicles, the stems and branches of which are also pink. Another oddity is the tomato tree, native of South America. It branches out into quite a large tree, with leaves six or more inches in diameter. It is well filled with yellow, edible fruit, which is very little like a tomato.

Two of the many banana trees in the banana house are in fruit. Another dwarf variety from China is displaying showy, bright red bracts, and another tall variety, with queer taillike inflorescence and pink bracts, is in bloom.

In the orchid house a number of fine specimens of the snail-shell orchid, Epidendron cochleatum, collected in Southern Florida by Mr. Nash, are displaying their graceful flowers in great profusion. Among these are several varieties, the lip of the flower being light brown, instead of the usual deep purple of this variety.

In a near-by house, where only moderate heat is maintained, another beautiful orchid from the Himalayan region is displaying hundreds of pure white blossoms fully two inches in diameter. Its chickenpox stems look very much like olives when the plant is not in bloom, and they help materially to make the plant interesting.

The Transvaal is represented by the scarlet daisy, a graceful daisylike flower larger than the ox-eye daisy of American meadows and much more gaudy, as its name indicates.

In another house camphor, cinnamon, and allspice are growing luxuriantly and in another are lemon and orange trees in fruit.

A large orange tree is snowy with its abundance of fragrant blossoms. Near by red and white varieties of the Camellia Japonica are displaying their waxy blooms.

The water lily house has been overhauled recently and several of the most beautiful varieties are in bloom, notably the big purple Egyptian lotus.

COL. JOHN A. BALDWIN DEAD.

Special to The New York Times.

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., March 15.—Col. John A. Baldwin, Sixteenth United States Infantry, died here to-day. He commanded the famous Ninth Infantry when it saved the Colorado Volunteers from annihilation in the Philippines and commanded the Twenty-second Infantry at the famous Biboney River battle.

Col. Baldwin had been in the army since July 27, 1872, when he was appointed Second Lieutenant. At the time of the appointment he lived in New York. He was born in Iowa.

Dr. Mueller's Clinic Public.

Dr. Isidor Singer reported last night that many physicians of the city believe an official card of admission is necessary for the clinic of Dr. Friedrich Mueller, the assistant of Dr. Lorenz, who is to operate at 10 o'clock this morning in the Beth Israel Hospital, Cherry and Jefferson Streets. Dr. Singer said all physicians are welcome. He said two important operations would be performed, one case being that of hip dislocation, and the other club foot. Dr. Mueller will go to Chicago Friday morning, and a banquet will be given him Thursday evening in Pacific Hall, 259 East Broadway.

Secretary Terry's Condition.

At the Hahnemann Hospital, where George S. Terry, Secretary of the Park Board, is ill from pneumonia, it was said last night that his condition is slightly improved. There has been a lessening fever, it was said, and the patient rests more comfortably.

DEATH OF COL. DE QUERALTA.

Body of a Veteran of the Civil War and the Cuban Ten Years' War Found in His Room.

Col. Fernando Lopez de Queralt, veteran of the civil war of 1861-65, and a veteran of the Cuban ten years' war, was found dead in his bed at 108 East Sixteenth Street, last evening.

He had not been seen since Saturday, and the door of his room was forced open. Apoplexy or heart disease was the cause of death.

He had a most interesting history. Born of Spanish parents who went to Cuba and settled in Santiago de Cuba Province, he was sent to the United States for his education, which he received at a college in Philadelphia, taking a course of engineering. He was in this country when the civil war broke out, and at the first call for troops he enlisted. He was made a member of Gen. Hancock's staff, and he served in it as an engineer until the close of the war, retiring with the rank of Colonel.

When the Cubans, in 1868, determined on another attempt to throw off the Spanish yoke, Col. Queralta threw in his lot with the insurgents. He was made a General in the Cuban Army, and he took command of the Engineering Corps. He came frequently to this country for funds and ammunition. After the rebellion he came to this city. He was well known by frequenters of the Morton House, as he was an intimate friend of John R. Nugent, one of the proprietors.

During the past five years he had been employed in the District Attorney's office. He was a man of striking appearance, with white hair and black mustache. He was a member of the Loyal Legion and Sumner Post, Grand Army of the Republic.

Col. de Queralta was a great friend of Gen. Rafael de Quesada and his brother, Emanuel, who had command of the Cuban Army during the Ten Years' War. When the Spanish-American war broke out Col. de Queralta offered his services to the American Government, but on account of his age they were refused.

JAMES H. CONNELLY DEAD.

Stricken by Apoplexy When About to Greet a Visitor—Newspaper Writer and Author.

James H. Connelly, a newspaper man and writer on Theosophical subjects, died of apoplexy yesterday afternoon in his home, at 626 East One Hundred and Sixty-seventh Street. He was writing an article when a friend called to see him. He wheeled around in his chair to greet the visitor and fell forward to the floor, dying instantly.

Mr. Connelly was born in 1840 in Pittsburg. In 1857 he went to Cincinnati, and worked as a reporter for The Cincinnati Columbian. Later he worked for The Pittsburg Chronicle, The San Francisco Chronicle, and The Chicago Tribune. In 1868 he came to New York, and went on the staff of The Sun. When the war broke out he enlisted as First Lieutenant in the One Hundred and Forty-fifth New York Volunteers, and served throughout the war. On his return to New York he went back to The Sun. Subsequently he was on the staffs of nearly all the prominent newspapers of this city.

He was the author of several novels, among them "My Casual Death," and "Nella Sen," and many works and magazine articles on Theosophy. He was an intimate friend of Madame Blavatsky and William Q. Judge.

In 1872 Mr. Connelly married Celia Logan, an author and playwright, a pupil of Charles Reade, who survives with a son, Douglas L. Connelly, a teacher in Public School No. 52, in the Bronx. In accordance with Mr. Connelly's expressed wishes, his body is to be cremated.

IN THE SHOPS.

Irish flags for St. Patrick's Day, 12 by 18 inches in size and in silk, cost 40 cents.

One of the best of the St. Patrick's Day souvenirs is in the form of a big green shamrock, upon which is fastened a pipe and beside are the words, "Striking proof of friendship. Do not make light of it." Small boys are pleased. As a comparatively small leaf is used for small clay pipe, and others are larger, and have a regular sized pipe in wood. There is a bit of emery board on one side of the shamrock.

For the little children for Easter there is nothing better than velvet bunnies, which will last indefinitely and are as natural as may be. A moderately large one of these will cost 25 cents, a larger one, with a bell around its neck, 50 cents, and one still larger, carrying in its mouth a basket of eggs, 75 cents.

There are china bunnies in various sizes, with carrots in their mouths, and there are innumerable little carts drawn by bunnies and chickens. There are carts in the form of nests, drawn by chickens; there are carts in the form of hatches, with rabbits in the carts, and rabbits draw carts that are empty or loaded with eggs and chickens.

Conical eggs of an almost transparent porcelain have faces showing a variety of expressions painted upon them, and many have fabulous peanut noses on the sides of the face. The eggs are set into small vaselike affairs, which are painted to represent the shoulders and bust of a man. These cost 50 cents.

One of the most attractive things in the way of an Easter card, though it may not be intended for this, is a good-sized photograph of a Persian kitten watching curiously a basket of downy chickens, the result of the eggs from which they have recently escaped lying beside the basket. This is 50 cents.

For only 10 cents there are pretty, little Japanese trinkets for Easter, nothing absolutely new, but quite as pretty as anything to be found in this line, and prettier than most. There are little chairs with deep seats, each seat a candy box of wicker work, and with a chicken or a rabbit upon it. There are little baskets of different kinds, each also with a rabbit or a chicken. There are seats with families of bargeard fowls, and many different pretty things, and all the same low price.

There is the most surprising number of things in the way of more expensive bonbon boxes for Easter. There are egg boxes of all shapes and sizes and decorations. There seemed to be as many as possible last year, but there are more this season, and one large chocolate egg, the upper part of which opens on a hinge and shows a hollow inside, may be filled with other bonbons, and case and contents can be eaten. There are any number of other things in chocolate. There are chocolate eggs with the rosy head and arms of a sugar baby appearing at one end and the feet at the other, and there are comic chocolate eggs with queer little men popping out of them. There are chocolate butterflies, and for 50 cents one can buy a chocolate automobile with a load of rabbit passengers and chauffeur.

A large downy chicken, as big as a small hen, standing erect with a parasol over its head and a basket on the grass at its feet is one of the novelties in bonbon boxes.

There are more varieties of rabbits and birds of all kinds half as large and as natural as life which are bonbon boxes, and all the animals of the Zoo are appearing in eggs for Easter souvenirs.

A long-legged stork with a basket on its back is one of the newest things in Easter bonbon receptacles.

With the mania for pretty boxes, which seems to be growing, there are boxes with designs in Easter lilies each holding a quire of paper for a practical end at the same time pretty Easter gift.

In purchasing for St. Patrick's Day one must not forget the candies made on purpose for the occasion. There are tiny shamrocks in vivid green sugar candy, there are green hearts of a pale, but brilliant green, and there are small pipes in white and amber, and any or all of these for 20 cents a pound. There are plenty of other small green candies and quite a variety can be had all in the color of the Emerald Isle.

DERISION FOR LABOR MEN

Delegates Referred To as Receivers of "Taffy" in Albany.

Discussion Started by Mr. De Forest's Letter on Tenement House Law—Police Commissioner Greene Denounced.

The reading of a letter from Tenement House Commissioner Robert W. De Forest at the meeting of the Central Federated Union yesterday caused a stormy discussion, lasting more than half an hour, that was ended only when a watchful delegate moved the "previous question," shutting off debate.

The letter referred to the co-operation of the central body in opposing amendments to the De Forest tenement house law. Mr. De Forest urged the central body to send a committee to Albany to oppose the amendment at the next hearing, which takes place this week, and recomended that School Commissioner Samuel B. Donnelly and Daniel S. Jacobs, who have represented the central body at Albany, be continued as its representatives. A motion was made and seconded to adopt the suggestions in the letter.

Delegate Wolf of Cigarmakers' Union No. 90 arose before the motion was put and wanted to know what good was ever done by labor organizations in sending committees to the Legislature.

"You are going down on your knees all the time before the old parties," he said, "and asking them to do this and that. Why don't you leave the old parties alone and send your own men? Nothing has ever come of the efforts of labor men in Albany."

"The delegate says what is not true," James F. Archibald said. "He probably believes what he says himself, but we know that this body has accomplished a great deal in the Legislature. The present tenement house law is a good law, but is not good enough yet. In the meantime the jerry builders are trying to get its best features eliminated."

Mr. Archibald then said he had been at Albany on many occasions in the interests of labor and had been received courteously always. The central body, he said, was the means of having the Fitzgerald bill, licensing billposters, killed. If it had become law, he remarked, it would have driven thousands of billposters and others out of work.

"The railroads are the only beneficiaries when committees are sent to Albany," a Socialist delegate said.

Philip Kelly of the Theatrical Protective Union said that undoubtedly the influence of the Central Federated Union had brought about much legislation favorable to labor. He enumerated the bills favorable to labor which had been passed, but he was laughed at by the Socialists.

Morris Brown of Cigarmakers' Union No. 144 began an attack on the two delegates who had represented the cigar body in opposing the proposed amendment to the tenement house law.

"I am not going to vote against the amendments," he said, "but I am going to vote against delegates who made you ridiculous. Delegates become contaminated when they go to Albany. They only get taffy from the Senators and Assemblymen, and they give taffy to us when they get back."

The Socialists applauded, and Brown went on to say that in fifteen years none of the committees who went to Albany for the central body had accomplished anything.

This body should send its own men to the Legislature instead of voting for a man who is as likely as not the proprietor of a gimmill," said the delegate of the Metal Polishers. "Haven't you enough men here to elect to the Legislature?"

"Mr. Archibald said he was kindly received," Delegate Brown remarked. "That was simply more taffy."

"Oh, no," Mr. Archibald retorted. "I said I was received courteously [derisive 'Oh! ohs!' from the Socialists] and I did my fighting afterward. I carried my point."

"I know better," Mr. Brown said.

"You must have been there, then," Mr. Archibald retorted again.

"No," Mr. Brown continued, "but I have been watching matters."

Then Delegate Brown said that labor might win out through strikes, but never through legislation. Instead of asking the legislators at Albany to pass bills, the labor delegates should command them, he said. "They are the servants of the people."

"I wouldn't be one of the lobbyists for any money," said the delegate of the steamfitters, who had been waiting for a chance. "It's worse than sponging in a saloon."

Matthew Barr of the Amalgamated Steel Metal Workers said that the committees sent to Albany were not lobbyists.

"I have no doubt, he continued, "that when we have a Socialist we will all get everything we want, including free transportation. In the meantime, however, I will have to pay my own car fares until that time comes."

"If we accept Delegate Brown's ideas," Delegate Donnelly said, "every man elected to office is the abject slave of the people who vote for him. He is a moral leper if he doesn't do exactly what the labor unions order him to do. If that is not tyranny, I would like to know what tyranny is."

A prolonged derisive "Oh!" arose from the Socialist delegates.

A letter was read from Chief Clerk Kipp of the Police Department in reply to a complaint that detectives from the Twenty-first Precinct had interfered in a meeting of the Amalgamated Wood Workers, at 231 and 233 East Thirty-third Street, on Feb. 5. The letter said that information had been received that the meeting was to be addressed by two Anarchists, one of whom the detectives had been informed, always carried brass knuckles and the other a revolver. The gist of the letter was that the detectives went there in the interests of order.

Delegate McMahon of the Eccentric and Standard Engineers complained that Police Commissioner Greene, after a committee of delegates had asked him to continue Sergt. Frank Mangin, Jr., as Chief of the Bureau of Boiler Inspection, had appointed Sergt. G. W. Brown, a nephew of Railroad Commissioner Dunn. McMahon said that Sergt. Brown had no experience in boiler inspection and was a brakeman by trade. Resolutions were passed condemning Commissioner Greene. It was decided also to write to Mayor Low about the matter.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, March 15.—The atmospheric conditions have changed but little in the last few days. An area of high pressure continues to cover the northwest part of the country, and the pressure is low over the Southwest.

The rains have about ceased in the Lower Mississippi Valley and Tennessee. Light rains fell to-day in Eastern Tennessee, Northern Georgia, Southern Florida, and locally over the northern plateau.

It is somewhat warmer in the Middle Rocky Mountain region and the Northwest, and colder on the New England and the Middle Atlantic Coast. Fair weather is probable Monday and Tuesday in all districts east of the Rocky Mountains, except the East Gulf States and the Lower Mississippi Valley, where unsettled weather, with occasional showers, is indicated. The temperature changes will not be important. The winds along the Atlantic Coast will be mostly fresh northeast to east, on the Gulf coast light and variable, and on Lake Michigan light to fresh southeast.

Steamers departing Monday for European ports will have fresh northeast winds and fair weather to the Grand Banks.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

LEE AND ARNOLD.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of Friday, the 6th, I notice a communication signed "Pownal Alpin," who seems to have taken seriously the idea of erecting a monument to Benedict Arnold, as previously mentioned by Mr. Snyder. It seems perfectly clear that when Mr. Snyder said the cadets of West Point "would just dote on dedicating such a monument," he was saying it in pure sarcasm, as we all know that all patriotic American soldiers would scorn anything which even hinted at honoring a traitor.

Now, while Gen. Lee was not a traitor in the sense that Arnold was, history shows that he did his best to defeat the United States Government and disrupt the Union. Had he succeeded, America would not have become such a prominent factor in the world's progress as it is to-day, as it would have been a "house divided against itself."

While cordial feelings between the North and South are very commendable and should be encouraged, it is not natural that the North should "dote on" honoring Lee nor the South "dote on" honoring Grant. If Lee is to be honored at Gettysburg, why not also erect a monument to Jefferson Davis? Doubtless he was as sincere in his desire to establish the Confederacy on a firm footing as was Lee.

Let such section honor its own as may suit its pleasure, forget the past, and aim to make the future as harmonious and prosperous as possible. But if the country is to honor Gen. Lee as a soldier, forgetting and forgiving what he tried to do, then by all means, as somebody has suggested, let us honor Gen. Grant at the same time, and show him in the act of returning the sword to Gen. Lee. Such a monument might be accepted as an evidence of National harmony, but not one of Lee alone.

GEORGE D. R. HUBBARD.
Brooklyn, March 8, 1903.

LEE AS A SOLDIER.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Philip Snyder's letter, printed in your issue of this date, is an example of the mercilessness of blind prejudice. It reminds me of the time when I was a boy here in New York, when I would listen to gray-bearded men arraigning Gen. U. S. Grant as an execrable monster. I remember I was much perplexed and sorely worried and I could not undertand how my father could vote for a man so terribly wicked and selfish; a man so ruthless and cruel; one who sought to make himself a dictator, etc. These old men, without doubt, really believed they were estimating the great General justly and on convincing grounds, and I believe if it had been in their power, their absurd antipathies would have led them to consign Gen. Grant to a place hotter than that enjoyed by the three men of old Testament narrative.

I was glad when it was suggested that a monument, a National monument, if you please, be erected in memory of Gen. Robert E. Lee. Gen. Lee surrendered as a soldier and a gentleman. This status Gen. Grant in thought, word and manner was careful to acknowledge, and his demeanor toward the fallen General will ever redound to his honor and sense of justice. Gen. Lee lost, aye, but if he had not lost, he would have risen, a figure transcendent and mighty, overshadowing the great Lincoln and Grant, and all the memorable names of civil war times. Gen. Lee fought as earnestly for what he believed to be the right as Gen. Grant strove on his side to maintain the right. Lee was an ideal soldier, chivalrous, brave and noble, just in all things; a Christian gentleman, beloved by his soldiers and by all who knew him.

All Americans should be proud of the inspiring manhood of Gen. Robert E. Lee, for he was an American of Americans, who failed in the defense of a cause he earnestly believed to be just.

JOHN R. DeZELLER.
New York, March 9, 1903.

BENEDICT ARNOLD.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I venture to take up some space in your paper in replying to Mr. Snyder's interesting letter in this day's issue? I shall be only too glad to fall in line with his very generous views of Gen. Benedict Arnold if he in return will not advocate the erecting of a monument to that officer's memory. I must say, however, the extenuating circumstances advanced by Mr. Snyder in mitigation of Gen. Arnold's treachery appear to me to be very weak.

Arnold married a Tory wife. Why should he not have done so? She was at that time the reigning belle of Philadelphia, and a woman who from all accounts would have deemed it dishonorable to lend active aid to the enemy; that she tempted or influenced him in his subsequent actions has been conclusively refuted by Sabine in his "Loyalist of the American Revolution." Arnold himself, on his flight from West Point, left a letter for Gen. Washington, assuring him of his wife's innocence, and also, to his credit, he was not mean enough to quote the historical Adam's saying. "She gave me of the tree and I did eat." As to Gen. Arnold's "delivery of the goods," was it G. O. D. transaction? If so, he got the better of the bargain; he got the cash, &c. That he intended to do so, conclusive proof was found in the papers taken from the person of Major André.

What a "hungry Confederate" would have done under the circumstances I do not pretend to answer, but I feel sure he would not have acted (if he could) with more infamy. When Mr. Snyder was putting this question to himself, possibly he was thinking of the quotation in Livy, "There is nothing men will not attempt where great enterprises hold out the promise of great rewards."

In conclusion I must congratulate Mr. Snyder in not mentioning Benedict Arnold's last exploit, viz.: The attack upon New London, Conn., which was carried out with unsurpassed cruelty. He was then in the British service, under the immediate command of Sir Henry Clinton, who never countenanced the way his orders were carried out.

By all means let us have peace, and no monument. POWNAL-APLIN.
New York, March 9, 1903.

LEE AND ARNOLD.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to answer briefly Mr. Philip Snyder's dissertation in your issue of March 9, on "Lee and Arnold."

Lee was a rebel, as were Washington, Jefferson, Hancock, and others, who fought against established authority in defense of his native land, (Virginia,) his home, and his family.

Arnold was a rebel first, and a traitor, as was Aguinaldo, only he betrayed his brother rebels for a paltry $50,000; while Aguinaldo only yielded for a sum four times as great, and then he did not ravage his native land with fire and sword as did Arnold.

Lee did do gallant service for his country in Mexico, being mentioned along with Grant as especially deserving of promotion. Believing his allegiance to be due to the State of his birth, and that that State had a perfect a right to withdraw from, as to enter the Union, he could not, as a sincere and honorable man, (and no one has had the hardihood to deny he was both,) do otherwise than he did.

Now do not, pray, put me down as being biased by sectional prejudice, for I was born and raised on the banks of the noble Hudson, not many miles north of Poughkeepsie, and only stopping here temporarily, but I am thankful my mental horizon is not bounded by the rail-fence that surrounds the farm on which I was born, nor so clouded by prejudice and ignorance that I cannot give an impartial judgment on two figures that stand out as boldly contrasted in American history as do Lee and Arnold. Nor have I the audacity to try to belittle one whom history and the world at large accords the place of one of the grandest characters in the American civil war, Gen. Robert E. Lee.

GROCERY STORES AND THE SUNDAY LAW.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The article published in your issue of Thursday, March 12, places me in a position which is not justified by the facts, and a very unenviable one.

There certainly must be some mistake on the part of your correspondent in Albany. He says: "Members of the Grocery Clerks' Protective League appeared before the Codes Committee to advocate the Finch bill, providing there must be a literal enforcing of the Sunday law with reference to grocery stores." This is an error. There is now a law, which in most parts of the city is obeyed. A large proportion of the grocery stores close, in obedience to it, at 10 o'clock. Many grocery stores do not open at all on Sundays, as their trade does not demand it and their license for the sale of liquors will not permit it, but in many sections of this city it is an absolute necessity for them to open on Sunday mornings.

If the law compelling them all to close at 10 o'clock were enforced, it seems to me that it would meet the wishes of the citizens of New York and would not offend the sensibilities of any one, as the business is carried on inside the store in an orderly manner and to the convenience of thousands in this city. That is not what a very small minority of the grocery clerks want. The Finch law would compel the closing of all grocery stores all day on Sunday. It says that all manner of selling or offering for sale is prohibited, except that meals may be sold to be eaten on the premises where sold or served elsewhere by caterers, and prepared tobacco, milk, ice, and soda water may be sold in places other than where groceries, vegetables, spirituous or malt liquors or wines are kept or offered for sale, and except also that between the hours of 5 o'clock and 8 o'clock P. M. prepared meats, fish, salads, and cheese may be sold.

You can see by the wording of the law that it is aimed at grocers only. Why prepared tobacco and soda water and prepared meats, fish, salads, and cheese, with flowers and confectionery, are permitted to be sold, while groceries are forbidden to be sold, appears strange. Some of these articles will keep for months, others are luxuries, none except drugs a necessity, and why should not a grocer be permitted to sell milk to his customers on Sunday morning?

It would be a great hardship to the grocers in densely populated districts not to be allowed to open on Sunday morning until at least 10 o'clock.

Thousands of small dealers who are barely able to make a living and may be able, after a year's hard work, to save $300 or $400 for a rainy day would be cut off from supplying their customers with milk, butter, &c., which they need for use on Sundays, causing them a very serious loss and great inconvenience to thousands of people whose wives do not get their husbands' wages until very late on Saturday night, and in thousands of instances where their husbands work at night and do not reach home until early on Sunday morning.

It was to advocate this law that a small minority of the retail grocers' clerks appeared before the committee, and I will guarantee that not one grocer's clerk who is desirous to own a grocery store himself advocates such a law as this bill. It is the men who are constantly looking at the clock, who have no higher aspirations than to be a clerk all their lives, who are advocating it. There is no business carried on in this city requiring closer attention to details and more constant attention to business in order to be successful than the grocery business. It was in opposition to the enactment of this law that I appeared before the Codes Committee on Wednesday.

In the course of my remarks I stated my own position when I first started for myself, and in spite of my own experience as a grocer I stated the fact that I keep my store open, not because I wish to, but because I am compelled to, until 10 o'clock on Saturday night, reaching home about 10:30, then sitting and reading the evening papers, getting to bed about 11:15, and from force of habit waking at 6 o'clock, tossing around in bed trying to sleep, then wake about 7:30, take a bath, and get down to breakfast at 8 o'clock, after that reading the Sunday papers until time to get ready to go to church at 11 o'clock, waiting at I found it easier to be at work than trying to kill time on Sunday morning. This is about the only part in my remarks which your correspondent could construe into my saying that the clerk would fool away his time reading the papers.

It was claimed by one of the advocates of the bill that the grocery clerk had very hard work. There is no question that he has very long hours, but he certainly, except in rare instances, has no hard work. When he opens the store in the morning he has a couple of busy hours, until the breakfast hour is over; then he has very little to do for a couple of hours; then he is busy for two hours until 12:30; after that until 4:30 he has very little to do except clean up, and after 6 o'clock until closing time he has very little to do.

The enactment of the Finch bill, advocated by the Retail Grocery Clerks' Association, would entail hardship on very many people doing business in this city. It would inconvenience thousands. It would benefit no one. L. J. CALLANAN.

GIANT 8 FEET 2 INCHES TALL.

H. Camille Hugo, Here from France, Also Weighs 502 Pounds.

Towering above his fellows as the masts of the American Liner St. Paul towered above the masts of a schooner alongside H. Camille Hugo walked about the American Line dock yesterday the observed of all observers. He had just come down the gang-plank, which had been put to a severe strain by his 502 pounds, and was seeing all he could of New York from the vicinity of West Street, until Whiting Allen was ready to escort him to Madison Square Garden, where he will be on exhibition.

This giant was discovered, it is said, in the outskirts of Paris. The official figures regarding him are as follows: height 8 feet, 2 inches; chest measurement, 163 inches; nearly 4 feet from finger tips to finger tips; wears a shoe two feet long.

On this ship was a Russian lad known as "Leo," the Lion-faced Boy." He also will be exhibited.

FRIDAY, MARCH 20

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

The chief incident last week was the continuation of the weakening of the banks by the absorption of cash by the Sub-Treasury. Each dollar of lost cash will practically reserve money, and required a four-fold reduction of loans. The week ended with some signs that these distressing and disturbing conditions may soon end, and that the banks may be left free to conduct their banking business with reference to banking conditions. This is not the case when banks are required to conduct their credits with reference to conditions beyond their control, and not with primary reference to their wishes or their customers' resources. The wonder is that, doing business in this way, the harm done is so small, not that it is so large. It is probably true that not another financial capital or people could so well adapt themselves to conditions so nearly unbearable. Were they wholly unendurable there would be a speedier change. In this sense some are not sorry that the Aldrich bill's defeat opens a prospect of better legislation through the Senate Committee's preparation this Summer of something the next Congress may adopt. A new low point upon the average for the year was established on Tuesday, but the later dealings were upon improving prices. The net result was to leave thirty-seven stocks and nine bonds higher by a full point or more upon the week's business. Fifty-eight stocks and thirty-nine bonds fell a point or more. The sentiment at the week's close was perhaps even better than the change in the prices indicate.

ON THE LONDON EXCHANGE.

LONDON, March 15.—The stock market opened with an uncomfortable feeling last week, and prices continued irregular until the closing yesterday, when there were some evidences of strengthening. Wall Street held the centre of the stage, and reports regarding the financial situation there caused apprehension and a rush to realize, but the later reassuring reports brought a return of confidence, and prices recovered slightly, although almost all the American list showed a decline. This flurry affected the whole market and attested to the extent of Wall Street's influence on the stock market here.

One of the features of the week was the fact that consols receded to a lower point than they had reached since 1870. This fall was due mainly to the continued tightness of money and the approaching reduction in the interest on consols. There was not much doing in other directions, investors playing a waiting game. Mexicans and Central and South Americans showed a decided improvement, and South Africans were also regarded more favorably. Copper shares aroused a short-lived interest because of the advance in the price of the metal, but the later decline in the price sent Rio Tintos back sharply.

GERMAN MONEY AND TRADE.

BERLIN, March 15.—All the weekly financial reviews point out the intense interest of the Boerse here last week in the financial situation in New York. The opinion apparently predominates that conditions in Wall Street have become more favorable—at least, German apprehensions are less pronounced.

New York did not appear as a borrower in Berlin last week, but the New York and London markets continued to affect the German money rates, private discount rising ⅜ on the week. Nevertheless there was scarcely any change in the abundance of money. The rates of foreign exchange varied but slightly, the exchange on most European centres being fractionally lower and on New York a trifle higher than a week ago.

The stock market continued rather firm, with a light volume of transactions. Wall Street did not seriously affect the trading. Canadians and domestic as developed a good demand. Other denominations were neglected. Foreign rentes attracted less attention. Industrials manifested considerable activity, the tendency of the quotations being generally upward. Irons and coalers were particularly strong upon the favorable market reports. The Kölnische Zeitung states that the American demand for iron has developed surprisingly during the past fortnight. A considerable number of American contracts were taken during the last few days for the September quarter. The coal trade shows an improving demand, and Paris has begun to buy coal shares here.

Ocean transportation shares developed great strength upon the publication of the Hamburg-American Company's report stating that the freight market had passed its worst point. The report of the North German Lloyd Company, published this morning, shows net profits of $3,221,250, after deducting the repayment of interest. The company will write off $3,152,500, against $2,957,250 last year, and will carry the remainder to the reserve and special funds. The report states that business has improved since the new year.

THE MANCHESTER MARKET.

MANCHESTER, March 15.—Business in the cloth market last week was exceedingly difficult to negotiate. The violent fluctuations in the Liverpool market were detrimental to any operations of magnitude. Later in the week, however, the inquiry became somewhat more active. Offers from India for shirtings proved generally impracticable, though there were occasional transactions for China. The trade in all departments was of a hand-to-mouth character.

The inquiry for yarns was limited, operations being confined chiefly to those qualities required for immediate use.

Copper at Fifteen Cents.

The GEORGE A. TREADWELL MINING COMPANY is equipped to produce copper at a profit at five cents a pound. In fact the gold in the ore will in some of its mines pay the entire cost of mining and smelting, leaving the copper cost-free, and in all of its mines the gold is an important factor, materially reducing the cost of copper production.

All our calculations of profit are based on copper at ten cents a pound. At fifteen cents the profit is enormous.

Copper is now produced on the Verde Copper Belt, where our rich and extensive properties are located, cheaper than anywhere else in the world.

We have already a mile and a half of underground development work, opening up rich and extensive ore bodies, and our first smelter is nearly ready to run.

A small amount of the Treasury stock is for sale at par—$10 a share—up to March 20th and $11 a share after that date.

HEALTH BOARD'S REFORMS

City Club Trustees Praise Dr. Lederle's Administration.

Issue a Pamphlet Setting Forth What Has Been Accomplished for the Public Welfare Since He Assumed Office.

Charles C. Nadal, William H. Baldwin, Jr., Horace B. Deming, Wheeler H. Peckham, and Thomas R. Slicer, as a special committee of the Trustees of the City Club, have issued a pamphlet of fifty-two pages, in which they call attention to the present and past management of the Board of Health. It is expressly stated that the pamphlet is not meant to be a campaign document, though all the conclusions drawn show the superiority of the administration of the department under Dr. Lederle. The City Club will offer the pamphlets for sale at 10 cents each on the news stands. The committee has in preparation several reports on other city departments, which will be published if it is found that there is a popular demand for accurate and comprehensive information about the city departments.

Attention is called to the powers of the department, such as the requirement of the police force to aid the board at all times, the right to isolate patients suffering with contagious diseases, and to quarantine houses, streets, and vessels. Speaking of the past administration of the department the pamphlet says:

Persons who made special investigation of the matter charged that the average blackmailing by officials of the Health Department amounted to fully $1,500,000 a year. If, for instance, a manufacturer could save $2,000 a year by burning soft coal, he could afford to have his violation of the smoke ordinance overlooked. It was well understood by property owners that they could regularly escape making repairs ordered by the payment of a bribe equal to 25 per cent. of the estimated cost of the work. If the case were such that the conditions demanding remedy could not be ignored, or if the owner decided that it was to his interest to do the work required, it was suggested to the owner to employ a certain firm recommended by the officials of the department. The charges of this firm were exorbitant, but experience convinced owners that it was cheaper in the long run to act on the recommendation.

The two Presidents of the Board of Health during Mayor Van Wyck's administration, Michael C. Murphy and his successor, John B. Sexton, were typical specimens of the spoils politician. Neither knew anything of the real duties of such a position.

Ernst J. Lederle, Ph. D., Mayor Low's appointee, upon taking charge of the Health Department, found that for four years it had been a refuge for the faithful of Tammany Hall rather than an instrument of government. The number of superfluous employes was so great that the offices scarcely sufficed to hold them comfortably. Dr. Lederle immediately dismissed 187 employes. When the reclassification of employes was completed it was found that about $100,000 had been saved to the city in salaries alone.

While abolishing public nuisances, combating disease with consistent and intelligent measures, repairing dilapidated and antiquated hospitals, establishing new hospitals, dispensaries, ambulance stations, and disinfection stations in Manhattan and in the other boroughs which had been scandalously neglected, Dr. Lederle has been getting rid of worthless and useless employes and reforming the methods of the department.

In the matter of medical supplies the present practice of the department is to obtain an estimate in each case from two or more reputable manufacturers or regular wholesale dealers. The food supplies for the hospitals and some of the miscellaneous supplies, which are used in large quantities, are bought under annual contracts made after the competitive bidding. Before 1902 this was the practice only as to coal. The report continues:

It will be remembered that the present main building of the department was formerly the New York Athletic Club's quarters. It was bought by or through Richard Croker and sold to the Democratic Club. Later it was sold to Henry J. Bräker and forthwith was leased, for a period of ten years from May 1, 1899, at an annual rental of $16,000. Repairs are now in progress to remove the imminent danger of fire.

To this building were removed from the former quarters in the Criminal Courts Building the valuable and important records of the Bureau of Vital Statistics. These were scattered about and in constant peril of fire. In the basement of the building was a large swimming tank with heavy brick and cement walls. Dr. Lederle has converted this into a record room by the addition of a steel roof and ventilating facilities, and the records will soon be safe from harm, even though the building itself should be destroyed by fire.

Under Tammany there was attached to the Department of Health an advisory board. While exploited in the pages of the annual reports this board was seldom or never consulted; the records may be searched in vain for evidence of its activity. The board is a voluntary body the members of which serve without pay. Dr. Lederle secured as members physicians of the highest standing. They meet frequently for consultation with Dr. Lederle.

Under Tammany the work of the sanitary squad was not systematized. This has been done by Dr. Lederle. The system was soon working to that within the shortest possible time after a complaint was made the case was investigated and the nuisance abated. One nuisance which for many years afflicted the people of certain portions of the city, especially along the East River near Forty-second Street, was the offensive odors of the abattoirs. The department insisted from the moment Dr. Lederle assumed office that the rendering process should be under constant inspection, and should be so conducted that the odors would not escape. The result has been the virtual suppression of that form of intolerable nuisance.

The department now scrutinizes the milk supply and its sources with the greatest minuteness. Measures have been taken never thought of before. Inspectors have been detailed to visit the farms from which the city's milk supply comes, and to instruct the farmers in proper ways of keeping the milk sweet and pure.

The Health Department has carried on an elaborate inspection of meat, fish, fruit, and many other foods. Dr. Lederle has shown, as in the case of phenacetin powders and other drugs, their adulteration, and the department will prosecute and punish the frequent guilty of these frauds. He has seen to it that carbonated waters must be manufactured only in clean places, and has called official attention to the filthy condition of the city markets.

Before 1902 the department had never made an inspection of churches. The department now considers it of the greatest importance that the best possible sanitary condition should be secured, not only in churches, but also in all buildings where crowds assemble. Mercantile houses are under constant inspection, not only because of the great daily gatherings in many of them, but also because children are employed in many. The inspection of the Chinese quarter is also an innovation by Dr. Lederle. This was because of the appearance of the bubonic plague in San Francisco, the communication between the Chinese in these two widely separated cities being constant and frequent.

When the present administration came into office smallpox was raging to an extent amounting almost to an epidemic. Dr. Lederle lost no time in initiating plans to secure a general vaccination of the public. The thoroughness and comprehensiveness of this work may be gathered from the fact that every tenement house in the Boroughs of Manhattan, Brooklyn, and the Bronx was visited and vaccination urged upon all occupants. It was found that the unsanitary conditions which had been allowed to continue under the old administration had permitted the disease to become so established that the work of suppression was extremely difficult. But it was accomplished.

The discovery that tuberculosis is a highly infectious disease has been made in recent years. The spread of the contagion, the report says, is due in large measure to the careless spitting of those who have the disease. The rule of the Board of Health making it a misdemeanor to spit in cars, ferryboats, and public places has been extended to include sidewalks and hallways in tenements. For the first time in the history of the department the duties of the inspectors include the detection of contagious eye diseases.
